

The Asiatic Society

1, Park Street, Calcutta-700 016

Book is to be returned on the Date Last Stamped

Date

Voucher No.

2	2001	35934

CAPITAL OF ASOKAN COLUMN AT SARNATH.

Frontispiece.

ASOKA

RADHAKUMUD MOOKERJI

MOTILAL BANARSIDASS

Delhi Varanasi Patna

Bangalore Madras

First Edition : 1928

MOTILAL BANARSIDASS
Bungalow Road, Jawahar Nagar, Delhi 110 007

Branches

Chowk, Varanasi 221 001
Ashok Rajpath, Patna 800 004
24 Race Course Road, Bangalore 560 001
120 Royapettah High Road, Mylapore, Madras 600 004

THE ASIATIC SOCIETY
CALCUTTA-700016

Acc. No. 52036

Date. 14.9.72

PRINTED IN INDIA

BY JAINENDRA PRAKASH JAIN AT SHRI JAINENDRA PRESS, A-45 NARAINA INDUSTRIAL AREA, PHASE I, NEW DELHI 110 028 AND PUBLISHED BY NARENDRA PRAKASH JAIN FOR MOTILAL BANARSIDASS, DELHI 110 007.

TO
THE SACRED MEMORY OF MY MOTHER
JAGANMOHINI DEVI
1848-1920

या देवी सर्वभूतेषु मातृरूपेण संस्थिता

PREFATORY NOTE

THE present work has grown out of my lectures at the Lucknow University. This mainly explains the addition of another work to the many already existing on the subject. But they are not too many for the subject. In spite of a large literature, old and new, in different languages, Pali, Sanskrit, English, French, and German, seeking from a variety of standpoints to interpret the unique personality and achievements of Asoka, the interpretation is not yet adequate or final. The very basis of the interpretation is something that is shifting, growing, and improving. The words of Asoka, telling best his own tale, and inscribed by him in imperishable characters on some of the permanent fixtures of Nature, have not themselves come to light all at once, but were discovered piecemeal, and at different places and times. The search for them in out-of-the-way places, the centres of population in Asoka's days, but now remote from the haunts of men, and hidden away in jungles, is a story of considerable physical daring and adventure in its early stages. But the discovery of the inscriptions did not mean the end of the chase. There was the difficulty of their decipherment, of finding the key to a knowledge that was lost and forgotten. The knowledge of the script in which Asoka had his words written on many a rock or pillar had remained lost to India for ages. The Chinese travellers, Fa-hien and Yuan Chwang, for instance, who had visited India in two different periods, the fourth and the seventh century A. D. respectively, and who were themselves no mean linguists, could not find local experts to help them to a right reading of the Asokan inscriptions they had come across on their itineraries. They have recorded wrong readings of those inscriptions, the results of mere guess-work or hearsay information of local people not confessing to their own ignorance of the scripts. Indeed, the recovery of this long-lost knowledge of Asokan script is a romance of modern scholarship. Even when the script was deciphered, and the words of Asoka were read, there was the further problem of their correct interpretation.

Thus Asokan scholarship has now to record more than a century of progress in its three directions of the discovery, decipherment, and interpretation of the inscriptions. The progress is marked by the following principal events :

It was about 1750 that an Asokan inscription was first discovered when Padre Tieffenthaler saw at Delhi fragments of the Delhi-Mirath Pillar.

In 1785, J. H. Harington first visited the Barabar and Nagarjuni Hill Caves. A few years earlier, Hodges on his way to the caves was assassinated "by the followers of one of the allies of Chyt Singh."

About the same time, the Delhi-Topra Pillar Inscription was found by Captain Polier, who presented some drawings of same to Sir William Jones.

In 1801 were published in the Asiatic Researches copies of the Delhi-Topra Pillar Inscription, and of portions of the Allahabad-Kosam Pillar Inscription from copies made by Captain James Hcare.

In 1822 the Girnar Rock Inscription was found by Major James Tod.

In 1834 was published in the third volume of the Bengal Asiatic Society's Journal the copy of the Allahabad Pillar Inscription made by Lieutenant T.S. Burt, together with a classified table of the Asokan letters prepared by James Prinsep. At that time Prinsep was not able to read the entire Asokan alphabet, but could only guess the value of post-consonantal ā, e, and Anusvāra. After six months' study, he improved his knowledge by recognising the consonants y, v, and s.

In 1836, the Shahbazgarhi Rock Edict was discovered by M. A. Court, a French officer of Maharaja Ranjit Singh.

The year 1837 is memorable in the history of Asokan scholarship. It witnessed the first successful reading of an Asokan inscription, the Delhi-Topra Pillar Edict, by Prinsep, who published his reading and translation of the inscription in JASB, Vol. vi. He had then already had before him copies of the inscriptions on the two pillars at Lauriya Araraj and Lauriya Nandangarh. The same year he also published a lithograph of the Delhi-Mirath Pillar Inscription from impressions taken by Major P. L. Pew, as also the Queen's Edict. The last event of the year was the discovery in another remote part of India of the Dhauli Rock Edict by Lieutenant Kittoe.

In 1838, further progress in Asokan studies was achieved by Prinsep who made the first comparative study of the two Asokan inscriptions at Girnar and Dhauli, discovered their identity in script, language, and contents, and deciphered and published them with translations in JASB, Vol. vii. Tracings on cloth of the Girnar Inscription were made by Captain Lang in 1835 for the Rev. Dr. J. Wilson of Bombay, who then sent them on to Prinsep for decipherment. Kittoe's copies of the Dhauli Inscription were also before Prinsep in 1838. These were his revised copies which he obtained at risk to his life. As stated by him, he arrived at Dhauli "before day-break and had to wait till it was light ; for the two bear cubs which escaped me there last year, when I killed the old bear, were now full grown and disputed the ground" (JASB, Vol. vii. 219).

In 1839, a copy of the Sahasram Rock Edict was secured by E. L. Ravenshaw from Shah Kabiruddin.

In 1840, copies of the Shahbazgarhi Rock Edict were made by C. Masson by going to the spot through a perilous region at considerable personal risk. The copies were examined in Europe by Norris, who first read in them the word Devānam-piyasa written in Kharoṣṭhī script.

In 1840 was also discovered on the rock at Bairat the so-called Bhabru Edict by Captain Burt whose copy of it was transcribed and translated by Captain Kittoe "with the aid of the learned Pandit Kamalā Kānta" [JASB, Vol. ix. 617].

In 1850, the Jaugada Rock Inscription was copied by Sir Walter Elliot who could recognise it to be another version of Asoka's Edicts which had been already found at Shahbazgarhi, Girnar, and Dhauli.

In 1860, the Kalsi Rock Inscription was discovered by Forrest who found its whole surface "encrusted with the dark moss of ages."

In 1872, Carlleyle discovered the Bairat Minor Rock Edict. To him we also owe the discovery of the Rampurwa Pillar Edict about the same time.

During these seventies was also discovered the Rupnath Minor Rock Edict which was originally found and very imperfectly copied some time ago by a servant of Colonel Ellis for the Bengal Asiatic Society.

Then followed in 1879 the epoch-making publication of Cunningham on the inscriptions of Asoka, being Vol. i, of the Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum. This work may be taken to mark the second stage in the history of Asokan scholarship, the first stage being represented in the work of Prinsep, Burnouf, and Wilson (1850). It will appear that of the Rock Edicts, Prinsep and Burnouf knew only of three, viz., those at Shahbazgarhi, Girnar, and Dhauli, and Burnouf and Wilson, of the Bhabru Edict as well; of the Cave-inscriptions, Prinsep knew only of Nagarjuni, and Burnouf, of both Nagarjuni and Barabar; and of the Pillar Edicts, Prinsep knew of all the versions except those at Kauśāmbī and Sanchi. By the time of Cunningham's Corpus, several additional Asokan Edicts were known, viz., the Minor Rock Edicts at Sahasram, Rupnath, and Bairat., and the Minor Pillar Edicts at Sanchi and Kauśāmbī.

There was still a crop of Asokan discoveries to follow.

In 1882, a fragment of R.E. VIII was discovered on a broken block at Sopara by Dr. Bhagwan Lal Indraji. Recently a boulder has been found bearing the first half of R. E. IX (EI, XXXII). Its language shows Sanskrit / changed into Prakṛita r.

The Mansehra Rock Edicts were discovered in parts by Captain Leigh, and by an Indian subordinate of the Panjab Archaeological Survey in 1889.

The three Mysore Minor Rock Edicts were discovered by Lewis Rice in 1891.

The Nigali Sagar Pillar Edict was discovered in 1895 and the Rummindei in 1896 by Führer.

In 1905 was discovered the Sarnath Pillar Edict by Oertel.

Lastly followed the discovery in 1915 of the Maski Rock Inscription by C. Beadon, a gold-mining engineer of the Nizam's Government.

In the meanwhile, considerable advance in Asokan studies was achieved in several publications, among which may be mentioned Senart's Les Inscriptions de Piyadasi (1881), and Bühler's editions of the Asoka edicts in ZDMG, and Epigraphia Indica, Vols. i. and ii. Along with these may also be mentioned the important contributions to Asokan scholarship made from time to time by scholars like O. Franke, V. A. Smith, Fleet, Michelson, Lüders, F. W. Thomas, Hultzsch, D.R. Bhandarkar, K. P. Jayaswal, B. M. Barua, and A. C. Woolner.

The last stage in Asokan scholarship for some time to come has been reached in the new edition of the Corpus published in 1925 by Hultzsch whose recent death is a deplorable loss to the study of Indian history in general and to Asokan study in particular.

Now that the Asokan Text and Interpretation have practically reached a final form and stage, a convenient text book on the subject seems to be called for in the interests mainly of the growing number of students who have to offer Asoka as a subject of study at the University examinations. The present compilation has no pretensions to originality, except in the matter of some points in Asokan chronology and of certain passages in the Edicts, notorious for the controversy regarding their meanings, on which new interpretations have been suggested. The general interpretation of Asoka's career does not also follow always the usual or accepted lines. The annotation of the inscriptions has been made fuller and comprehensive so as to include the different views and interpretations suggested, as well as parallel passages from Sanskrit and Pali works throwing light on the points at issue. The correspondence between the Asokan Edicts and Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra has been specially worked out. The best preserved text of each Edict has been adopted as the standard for its study, and important variations shown in other texts have been pointed out in the footnotes. A further element of interest has been introduced in bringing together in the work illustrations of important Asokan monuments available. Most of these illustrations are based on photoprints supplied by the Archaeological Department, but a few on photographs taken by me on the spot, viz., those of Dhauli, the Kalsi elephant, and the Pillars at Bakhra, Lauriya Araraj, and Rummindei. The Dhauli photograph I owe to Mr. Nirmal Bose, M.Sc. (now Director General of Anthropological Survey, Government of India) and the Rummindei to the arrangements kindly made by my pupil, Mr. P. P. Panday, M. A., of Narharia, Basti. A plate showing the Asokan Alphabet (based on drawings kindly prepared by Principal A. K. Haldar of the Government School of Art and Crafts, Lucknow) has been added as an aid to the study of the inscriptions in the original. I owe special acknowledgments to Mr. Charan Das Chatterji, M.A., Lecturer (and since Professor) in Indian History, Lucknow University), for many valuable references and suggestions.

The system of transliteration adopted here may be understood from the following examples : Lichchhavi, Kṛiṣṇa, Mahāvamsa. Both Sanskrit and Prakrit forms have been used for certain words according to convenience.

My grateful acknowledgments are due to His Highness Sir Sayaji Rao Gaekwad, of Baroda, and his Government for their award to me of the Sayaji Rao Gaekwad Prize with which this work is associated, and to Benares Hindu University for Sir Manindra Chandra Nandy Lectures (1927), based on portions of this work.

RADHAKUMUD MOOKERJI.

THE UNIVERSITY LUCKNOW,
April, 1927.

PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION

The first edition of this work was published in London in 1928 by Messrs Macmillan and Co. Ltd. For some time it has remained out of print. There has been, however, a steady demand for it, calling for a second edition. It is now issued with several Addenda based on new material discovered since the first edition.

The enormous mass of transliteration of Sanskrit and Prākṛit names and words involved a good deal of difficult printing, with various diacritical marks and accented types, leaving mistakes which could not be helped. The system of transliteration adopted in the work may be understood from the following examples : chikichhā, rāṇo, Choḍā, Taṁvapaṁṇī, aḷavasha-abhisitasa, Priyadraśisa.

My thanks are due to Messrs Macmillan and Co. Ltd. for their kind permission to issue this edition by waiving their copyright in my favour.

39, Ekdalia Road,
Calcutta, 19

RADHAKUMUD MOOKERJI
Member of Parliament

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION

The progress of Asokan scholarship and of the growing popularity of the study of Asokan history at the Universities has called for a new edition of the work incorporating in it some of the inscriptions of Asoka discovered since the second edition and figuring in this edition as Addenda for convenience of printing. The most important of these inscriptions is that found at Shar-i-kuna off Kandahar of which the most singular feature is its two versions given in Greek and Aramaic for the benefit of the particular subjects of Asoka's empire speaking the two different languages. Other important points of the new inscriptions are brought out in their proper places in the Addenda.

I owe my grateful acknowledgements to the kind help given to me by Dr. D. C. Sircar, Carmichael Professor of the Calcutta University and by Adhir Chakravarti M. A. of Government Sanskrit College, Calcutta, for correcting the proofs and helping me materially in other ways. The design of the jacket I owe to the renowned artist Sri Asit Kumar Haldar, showing the original form of the Asokan Pillar at Sarnath.

39, Ekdalia Road
Calcutta 19

RADHA KUMUD MOOKERJI

CONTENTS

CHAPTER	PAGE
I. EARLY LIFE AND FAMILY . . . . .	I
II. HISTORY . . . . .	II
APPENDIX A: ON ASOKAN CHRONOLOGY FROM THE
LEGENDS . . . . .	44
III. ADMINISTRATION . . . . .	47
IV. RELIGION . . . . .	60
V. MONUMENTS . . . . .	79
VI. SOCIAL CONDITIONS . . . . .	101
VII. TRANSLATION AND ANNOTATION OF THE INSCRIPTIONS :
A. MINOR ROCK EDICTS . . . . .	107
B. BHABRU (BAIRAT No. 2) ROCK EDICT . . . . .	117
C. KALINGA ROCK EDICTS (SEPARATE) . . . . .	120
D. FOURTEEN ROCK EDICTS . . . . .	128
E. SEVEN PILLAR EDICTS . . . . .	172
F. FOUR MINOR PILLAR EDICTS . . . . .	193
G. TWO COMMEMORATIVE PILLAR INSCRIPTIONS . . . . .	201
H. THREE CAVE INSCRIPTIONS . . . . .	205
APPENDIX B: ON THE CHRONOLOGY OF THE
ASOKAN EDICTS . . . . .	208
VIII. TEXTS OF THE INSCRIPTIONS . . . . .	215
APPENDIX C: ON THE SCRIPT, DIALECT, AND
GRAMMAR OF THE INSCRIPTIONS . . . . .	246
INDEX . . . . .	255
ADDENDA . . . . .	275

ILLUSTRATIONS

PLATE

I. CAPITAL OF ASOKAN PILLAR AT SARNATH	Frontispiece
II. LAURIYA ARARAJ PILLAR . . . . .	To face page 14
III. LUMBINI PILLAR . . . . .	,, 37
IV. FIGURE OF ELEPHANT CARVED ON STONE AT KĀLSI . . . . .	,, 61
V. RAMPURWA BULL-CAPITAL . . . . .	,, 62
VI. SAṆKĀŚYA PILLAR WITH ITS ELEPHANT CAPITAL	,, 84
VII. BAKHRA PILLAR WITH ITS LION-CAPITAL . . . . .	,, 86
VIII. RAMPURWA LION-CAPITAL . . . . .	,, 90
IX. LAURIYA NANDANGARH PILLAR . . . . .	,, 92
X. BHARHUT SCULPTURE SHOWING THE BODH- GAYĀ TEMPLE AND AN IMITATION ASOKAN PILLAR WITH ELEPHANT-CAPITAL . . . . .	,, 152
XI. ROCK-CUT ELEPHANT AT DHAULI . . . . .	,, 170
XII. LUMBINI PILLAR INSCRIPTION . . . . .	,, 201
XIII. NATIVITY IN SCULPTURE IN THE RUMMINDEI TEMPLE . . . . .	,, 204
XIV. BRAHMAGIRI MINOR ROCK EDICT . . . . .	,, 215
XV. ASOKAN ALPHABET . . . . .	,, 246
MAP OF ASOKA'S EMPIRE . . . . .	At end

CHAPTER I

EARLY LIFE AND FAMILY

IN the annals of kingship there is scarcely any record comparable to that of Asoka, both as a man and as a ruler. To bring out the chief features of his greatness, historians have instituted comparisons between him and other distinguished monarchs in history, eastern and western, ancient and modern, pagan, Moslem, and Christian. In his efforts to establish a kingdom of righteousness after the highest ideals of a theocracy, he has been likened to David and Solomon of Israel in the days of its greatest glory ; in his patronage of Buddhism, which helped to transform a local into a world religion, he has been compared to Constantine<sup>1</sup> in relation to Christianity ; in his philosophy and piety he recalls Marcus Aurelius ; he was a Charlemagne in the extent of his empire and, to some extent, in the methods of his administration, too,<sup>2</sup> while his Edicts, "rugged, uncouth, involved, full of repetitions," read like the speeches of Oliver Cromwell in their mannerisms [Rhys Davids]. Lastly, he has been compared to Khalif Omar and Emperor Akbar, whom also he resembles in certain respects.

As in the case of great characters like King Arthur and his

<sup>1</sup> It must be noted that opinions differ on the appositeness of the comparison. Rhys Davids holds that the conversion of Asoka was the first great step on the downward path of Buddhism, the first step to its expulsion from India. Another critic holds that while "Constantine espoused a winning cause, Asoka put himself at the head of an unpopular religious reform."

<sup>2</sup> Compare the missi dominici of Charlemagne akin to the puruṣas of Asokan edicts, and the Markgrafen to the Anta-Mahāmātras.

Knights of the Round Table, the good King Alfred, or King St. Louis of France, a mass of tradition has gathered round the name of Asoka. Myths and legends have freely and luxuriantly grown round it, especially in the tropical climate of Ceylon, and it would have been very difficult to recover his true history, were it not for the fact that he has himself left us a sort of autobiography in his messages to his people, written on rocky surfaces or exquisitely finished and polished pillars of stone. In these sermons on stone we find his true self revealed and expressed, his philosophy of life, his conception of an emperor's duties and responsibilities, and the extent to which he lived to realise the high ideals and principles he professed and preached. This kind of evidence, which is not only a contemporary but a personal record, too, is unique in Indian history, and, whether suggested by indigenous or foreign precedents, it is fortunate we have it for one of our greatest men. "O that my words were written! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!" This pious wish of Job was more than realised in the case of Asoka in a series of thirty-five inscriptions published on rock or pillar, of which some are located at the extremities of his empire.

Of the two sources of his history, the legends (whether Ceylonese or Indian) rather hover over his early life and tend to retreat before the light of the edicts thrown upon his later life, his career as emperor. The two sources are, again, sometimes in agreement, but oftener in conflict, in which case the inscriptions, as personal and contemporary documents, will have to be preferred. Moreover, the legends are themselves at conflict with one another in many places, and thus betray themselves all the more.

Ceylon tradition (as narrated in the Dīpavaṃsa and the Mahāvāṃsa) makes Bindusāra the husband of sixteen wives and father of 101 sons, of whom only three are named, viz., Sumana (Susīma according to the northern legends), the eldest, Asoka, and Tiṣya (uterine brother of Asoka), the youngest son. The mother of Asoka in the northern tradition is Subhadrāṅgī,<sup>1</sup> the beautiful daughter of a Brahman of Champā, who bore Bindusāra another son named Vigatāsoka (Vītāsoka), and not Tiṣya of the Ceylon books. In the southern tradition she is called Dharmā, the principal queen (aggamaheśī) [Mahāvamsatikā, ch. iv. p. 125],<sup>1</sup> the preceptor of whose family was an Ājīvika saint named Janasāna—a fact which may explain Asoka's patronage of the Ājīvika Sect. Dharmā came of the Ksatriya clan of the Moriyas.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Mentioned in the Asokāvadānamālā, but not in the Divyāvadāna.

(According to established constitutional usage, Asoka as Prince served as Viceroy in one of the remoter provinces of the Empire. This was the province of Western India called Avantirattṭham<sup>3</sup> [Mahābodhivamsa, p. 98] with headquarters (Rājadhāni) at Ujjain in the Ceylon tradition, but in the Indian legends it is the kingdom of the Svaśas<sup>4</sup> in Uttarāpatha (Div.) with headquarters at Taxila, where Asoka was temporarily sent to supersede Prince Susīma and quell the revolt against his maladministration. There was a second rebellion at Taxila which Prince Susīma failed to quell, when the throne at Pāṭaliputra fell vacant and was promptly seized by Asoka with the aid of the minister, Rādhagupta, and subsequently held deliberately against the eldest brother who was killed in the attempt to dethrone the usurper [see Divyāvadāna,<sup>5</sup> ch. xxvi.]. But the story of the accession is

<sup>1</sup> I owe this passage to Mr. Charan Das Chatterji, M.A., Lecturer in Ancient Indian History at the Lucknow University.

<sup>2</sup> Moriyavamsajā [Mahāvamsatikā, ib.; also Mahābodhivamsa, p. 98].

<sup>3</sup> I.e., the rāṣṭra or province of Avanti.

<sup>4</sup> Probably mistaken for Khaśas mentioned by Manu, x. 22, and also in an inscription [Ep. Ind. i. 132].

<sup>5</sup> While the Divyāvadāna represents the war of succession as between the two brothers, the Mahābodhivamsa represents it as between Asoka on one side, and a coalition of all his 98 brothers who made a common cause with their eldest brother Sumana, the yuvārāja, and hence the lawful heir to the throne. The Div. supports Asoka's claims by stating that even under Bindusāra, the Ājīvika saint, Piṅgalavatsa, summoned by the king, judged Asoka as the fittest of his sons for the throne. It also states that Asoka was further backed by the powerful support of the entire ministry of Bindusāra, of Khallātaka (Prime Minister) and 500 other ministers in his contest for the throne. We may also note here the tradition recorded by the somewhat differently told in the Ceylonese legends, which make Asoka seize the throne from Ujjain, where he had been throughout serving as viceroy, by making a short work of all his brothers except Tiṣya.

The northern and southern legends, however, agree as regards the disputed succession, which may therefore be taken as a fact. The southern legends are far wide of the truth in making Asoka a fratricide, the murderer of 99 brothers for the sake of the throne, for which he is dubbed Chandāsoka [Mahāv. v. 189]. Senart [Inscriptions, etc. ii. 101] has well shown how the legends themselves are not at one in their account of Asoka's career of cruelty. Tārānath makes Asoka kill only six brothers. Other authorities do not attribute to him any murder at all, but other forms of cruelty. The Asoka-avadāna represents him as killing his officers and wives, and setting up a hell <sup>1</sup> where some innocent people are subjected to the most refined tortures. The Mahāvamsa also relates how his minister under his instructions decapitates some false monks till he is stopped by his brother. In the Asoka-avadāna, he sets a price upon the heads of Brahman ascetics who insulted the statue of the Buddha till he is checked by his brother, Vītāsoka. Yuan Chwang records the tradition of "Asoka and his queen, in succession, making determined efforts to destroy the Bodhi

Chinese traveller, I-tsing, according to which Asoka's sovereignty was prophesied by the Buddha himself. The tradition relates that King Bimbisāra once saw in a dream that a piece of cloth and a gold stick were both divided up into eighteen fragments which, as explained by the Buddha, symbolised the eighteen schools into which his teaching would be split "more than a hundred years after his nirvāṇa, when there will arise a king named Asoka, who will rule over the whole of Jambudvīpa" [Takakusu's I-tsing, p. 14]. The Buddha's prophecy about Asoka as a righteous king who will enshrine his bodily relics in 84,000 "dharma-rājikas" occurs in the Divyāvadāna (xxvi. p. 368).

<sup>1</sup> Yuan Chwang saw a high pillar which marked the site of Asoka's "Hell," or Prison, equipped with all imaginable instruments of torture, and relates the tradition that the sight of an imprisoned arhat, whom no tortures could destroy, made Asoka realise his sin, demolish the prison, and make his penal code liberal [Watters, ii. 89]. The story of Asoka's hell is given in greater detail by Fa-hien (pp. 56-58 in translation of Giles).

tree," and when each attempt failed and the tree grew up each time, "Asoka surrounded it with a stone wall" [Watters, ii. 115]. According to Fa-hien [Giles, p. 59], the queen tried to destroy the Bo-tree out of jealousy when Asoka, already a zealous Buddhist, was always to be found under that tree for worship. The fact is that these legends were out to emphasise the contrast between the criminal career of Asoka prior to his conversion and his virtuous conduct that followed it. They were interested in blackening his character to glorify the religion which could transmute base metal into gold, convert Chaṇḍāsoka into Dharmāsoka [ibid.], and make of a monster of cruelty the simplest of men! <sup>1</sup>

Their testimony also contradicts that of his own words in Rock Edict V, in which his brothers (with sisters and other relatives) are specifically mentioned,<sup>2</sup> and also in Minor Rock Edict II, Rock Edicts III, IV, VI, XI, XII, Pillar Edict VII, and the Queen's Edict, in all of which is feelingly expressed the emperor's solicitude for the welfare of even distant relatives. We gather from these edicts that Asoka had a large family with "brothers and sisters, and other relatives settled at Pāṭaliputra and other provincial towns,"

<sup>1</sup> The epithet Chaṇḍāsoka suggested by Asoka's earlier cruelties does not, however, seem to be justified, if we limit his cruelties only to the murder of a single brother in the contest for the throne, while it may be that the brothers referred to as being alive well on in his reign (R.E. V and XIII) might be only his uterine brothers, of whom the legends give the name of one, viz., Tiṣya. The number of brothers slain according to the legends may be an exaggeration which marks legends, and even the edicts of Asoka. It may be well assumed, too, that the brothers slain might have been his step-brothers. According to the Mahābodhivaṇṇa (p. 99), as already stated, these 98 brothers with their leader, Yuvarāja Sumana, were slain in the course of the war of succession they had forced on Asoka, whom they regarded as the usurper. Thus Asoka could not be held responsible for their death under such circumstances.

<sup>2</sup> Strictly speaking, we cannot positively state from this passage which refers only to the existence of "the harems of his brothers and sisters" that the brothers were living at this time. But the fact of Asoka's affection for his brothers and sisters and their families, which alone is pertinent to the point discussed here, can be positively asserted from this passage.

“ sons and grandsons ” (R.E. XIII and V), who were all maintained at royal expense. Pillar Edict VII contains the expression : “ In all my female establishments, both here (at the capital) and in the outlying towns ” (cf. also R.E. V). Besides the evidence showing the existence of the harems of his brothers at different provincial towns, we have also the evidence of such brothers (called kumāras and ārya-putras) serving as his Viceroys at headquarters named, viz., Taxila, Tosali Ujjayinī [K.R.E.] and Suvarṇagiri [M.R.E. I Brah.]. As has been shown below, these Viceroys could not be his sons. Lastly, his affection for his children, too, expresses itself in the Kalinga Edict I : “ I desire for my children that they may enjoy every kind of prosperity and happiness both in this world and in the next.” A man with such tender solicitude for the welfare of all his relations could not be a monster of cruelty, as the legends represent him to be.

The relations between Asoka and his younger brother appear to be quite friendly and natural in the legends, but they give different accounts of these relations. Yuan Chwang, calling him Mahendra, relates that he used his high birth to violate the laws, lead a dissolute life, and oppress the people, till the matter was reported to Asoka by his high ministers and old statesmen. Then Asoka in tears explained to his brother how awkward was his position due to his conduct. Mahendra, confessing guilt, asked for a reprieve of seven days, during which, by the practice of contemplation in a dark chamber, he became an arhat and was granted cave-dwellings at Pāṭaliputra for his residence. According to Fa-hien, Asoka's brother, whose name he does not mention, had retired to the solitude on a hill which he was loath to leave, though “ the king sincerely revered him and wished and begged him to come and live in his family where he could supply all his wants.” In the end, the king constructed for him a hill inside the city of Pāṭaliputra to live closer to him. A different story is, however, given in other works. The Pali works call him Tiṣṣya, the Divyāvadāna Vīlāsoka, and some Chinese works Sudatta and Sugātra. These works also specify his offence to be that, as a Tīrthika, he had slandered the professed Buddhists as living in luxury and subject to passions. To convince him of his error, Asoka conspired with his chief minister to place him on the throne, and then appeared suddenly to accuse him as a usurper, whom he condemned to die after seven days. During this time he was treated to all pleasures and luxuries for which, however, he had no taste, with death facing him. By this example, Asoka wanted to show that no Buddhist with his dread of death and birth could ever give himself to pleasures. He then set free Vītāsoka, who, however, went away to a frontier land, became an arhat, saw Asoka at Pāṭaliputra, but soon left for another district where he was beheaded, being taken for one of the Nirgranthas upon whose heads the local king set a price. In the Mahāvamsa [v. 33], Asoka appoints his brother Tiṣya as uṇḍarāja, his Vice-regent, but he retired as a religious devotee under the influence of the Yonaka preacher, Mahādharmaṛakṣita, and was known by the name of 'Ekavihārika,' a vihāra being excavated for him at enormous expense in the rock called Bhojakagiri by Asoka, according to the story given in Dhammapāla's comment on the verses composed by Ekavihārika in the Thera-gāthā Commentary.<sup>1</sup> The same work refers to the youngest brother of Asoka, called Vītāsoka, whom it treats evidently as not the same brother as Tissa Ekavihārika. It relates<sup>2</sup> how he grew up, mastering all the vidyās and śilpas, arts and sciences, prescribed for the study of Kṣatriyakumāras; then he became a householder, and, under his teacher, Giridatta Thera, mastered the Sutta Piṭaka and Abhidhamma Piṭaka, until one day, while at shaving (massu-kamma), he noticed in his mirror his grey hairs, which set him a-thinking of the decay of life, and he at once embraced monkhood under Giridatta and soon became an arhat. This particular text thus distinguishes between the two brothers of Asoka by their different teachers, and attributes to them different gāthās.

Some of the Edicts mention the names of his closer

<sup>1</sup> Thera-gāthā Commentary, Sinhalese ed., Colombo, 1918, p. 603 f. This reference I owe to Mr. C. D. Chatterji.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. p. 295 f.

relations. Thus the second Queen Kāruvākī is mentioned, together with her son, Prince Tivara. A later inscription mentions Asoka's grandson Daśaratha. Both legends and inscriptions are at one in making Asoka a polygamist. The chronicles make his first wife the daughter of a merchant of Vedisagiri, Devī by name, whom Asoka had married when he was Viceroy at Ujjain. The Mahābodhivaṃsa calls her Vedisa-mahādevī (p. 116) and a Śākyaṇī (ibid.) or a Śākya-kumārī (p. 98), as being the daughter of a clan of the Śākyas who had immigrated to "Vedisam nagaram" out of fear of Viḍūḍabha menacing their mother-country (Viḍūḍabhabh-ayāgatānam Śākiyānam āvāsam Vedisam). Thus the first wife of Asoka was related to the Buddha's family or clan. She is also described as having caused the construction of the Great Vihāra of Vedisagiri, probably the first of the monuments of Sanchi and Bhilsa (tāya kārāpitaṃ Vedisagirimahāvihāram). This explains why Asoka selected Sanchi and its beautiful neighbourhood for his architectural activities. Vedisa also figures as an important Buddhist place in earlier literature (see Sutta Nipāta). Of Devī were born the son, Mahendra, and the daughter, Saṅghamitrā, who was married to Asoka's nephew, Agnibrahmā, and gave birth to a son named Sumana. According to Mahāvaṃsa, Devī did not follow Asoka as sovereign to Pāṭaliputra, for there his Chief Queen (agramahiṣī) then was Asandhimitrā [v. 85 and xx]. The Divyāvadāna<sup>1</sup> knows of a third wife of Asoka, Padmāvatī by name, the mother of Dharmavivardhana, who was afterwards called Kuṇāla. Both Mahāvaṃsa and Divyāvadāna agree in mentioning Tissarakkhā or Tiṣṣarakṣitā as the last Chief Queen of Asoka. The Divyāvadāna mentions Samprati as Kuṇāla's son. The Kashmir Chronicle mentions Jalauka as another son of Asoka. Fa-hien [Legge's tr., p. 31] mentions Dharmavivardhana as a son of Asoka, whom he appointed as the Viceroy of Gandhāra.

<sup>1</sup> Ch. xxvii. The Divyāvadāna states that Asoka first gave to his new-born babe by his queen Padmāvatī the name of Dharmavivardhana, but on seeing the beauty of his eyes which, as his amātyas, or ministers in attendance, pointed out, were like those of the Himalayan bird, Kuṇāla, Asoka nicknamed him as Kuṇāla.

Thus, taking the legends and Edicts together, we find the following relations of Asoka :

Father—Bindusāra, who had many wives.

Mother—Subhadrāṅgī, as named in the northern tradition ; also called Dharmā in the southern tradition.

Brothers—(1) Sumana or Susīma, eldest, but step-brother ; (2) Tiṣya, uterine and youngest brother ; also called Vītāsoka or Vigatāsoka in the northern legends, Mahendra by Yuan Chwang, and Sudatta and Sugātra in some Chinese works ; (3) Vītāsoka, according to Thera-gāthā Commentary cited above.

Wives—(1) Devī, with her full name, “ Vedisa-Mahādevī Śākyakumārī ” ; (2) Kāruvākī, called “ Dvītīyā devī Tīvalamātā,” “ second Queen, mother of Tīvara ” in the Edict ; (3) Asandhimitrā, designated as agramahisī, Chief Queen ; (4) Padmāvatī ; (5) Tiṣyarakṣitā.

Sons—(1) Mahendra, son of Devī ; (2) Tīvara, son of Kāruvākī ; (3) Kuṇāla, son of Padmāvatī, also known by the name of Dharṇavivardhana, as mentioned in Divyāvadāna, and by Fa-hien ; (4) Jālauka, mentioned in the Kashmir Chronicle. The Edicts tell of four princes serving as Viceroys in four different, and remote, provinces, and designated as Kumāras or Āryaputras, as distinguished from the sons of a lower status called dālakas from the status of their mothers [see P.E. VII].

Daughters—(1) Saṅghamitrā, whose mother was Devī ; (2) Chārumatī.

Sons-in-law—(1) Agnibrahmā, husband of Saṅghamitrā ; (2) Devapāla Kṣatriya, married to Chārumatī.

Grandsons—(1) Daśaratha, who became king ; (2) Samprati, son of Kuṇāla ; (3) Sumana, son of Saṅghamitrā.

On the basis of the texts to which we owe most of these names, it is also possible to ascertain some dates in the domestic life of Asoka. For instance, we are told in the Mahāvamsa that Asoka's eldest son and daughter, Mahendra and Saṅghamitrā, were both ordained in the sixth year of his coronation when they were respectively twenty and eighteen years old. Taking the date of Asoka's coronation to be 270 B.C., as explained below, we get 284 B.C. and 282 B.C. as the dates of the birth of Mahendra and his sister respectively. If we take the father's age at the birth of his eldest child as twenty years, then Asoka must have been born in 304 B.C., and was thus seen by his august grandfather, Chandragupta Maurya, who died in 299 B.C. It is also stated that Asoka's son-in-law, Agnibrahmā, was ordained in the fourth year of his coronation, i.e., in 266 B.C., before which a son was born to him. Thus Saṅghamitrā must have been married in 268 B.C. at the latest, i.e., at the age of fourteen.

CHAPTER II

HISTORY

FROM his early life we now pass on to the details of his career as king.

There was an interval of about four years between his accession to the throne and formal coronation, if we may believe in the Ceylon chronicles. The hypothesis about a contested succession might perhaps explain this. A more probable explanation suggested is that the coronation of a king must await his twenty-fifth year, as pointed out in the inscription of the Kalinga king, Khāravela [JBORS, Vol. iii. p. 461], so that Asoka must have ascended the throne when he was about twenty-one years of age. But this suggestion, as already explained, seems to be contradicted by tradition, if we may believe in it. According to it, Asoka must have ascended the throne at thirty, and been consecrated at thirty-four. The fact of an interval existing between his accession and coronation seems to be indicated in a way in the Edicts which the king is always careful to date from his abhiṣeka, coronation, as if to ensure that it should not be confused with accession. The Edicts also date from the coronation the events of his reign.

He assumed the two titles, Devānampiya and Piyadasi, signifying respectively "the favoured of the gods"<sup>1</sup> and "of pleasing countenance," or, more properly, "one who looks with kindness upon everything." The former title was used by his predecessors, as shown in the Kalsi, Shahbazgarhi and Mansehra texts of Rock Edict VIII, and also taken in the Dīpavaṃsa by Tissa, the contemporary king of Ceylon,<sup>1</sup> as well as by Asoka's grandson, Daśaratha, in the Nagarjuni Hill Cave Inscriptions; and the latter, under the name Piadaṃsana, seems to have been used by Asoka's grandfather, Chandragupta Maurya, as we learn from the Mudrā-rākṣasa (Act VI.). This title is also given to Asoka by the Dīpavaṃsa. All the Edicts refer to the king by his titles,<sup>2</sup> and omit the name Asoka, and scholars were at pains to prove the identity with Asoka of the person signified by the titles until the anonymity of the Edicts was removed by the discovery of a new Edict at Maski (the earliest of the Edicts), which uses the phrase—" Devānāṃpiyasa Asokasa," "of His Gracious Majesty, Asoka."<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Literally, "one dear to the gods" by his good deeds. The same sentiment is expressed differently in some of the legends on the coins of the later Gupta emperors: "the lord of the earth wins heaven (divaṃ jayati) by his virtuous actions (sucharitaiḥ)."

Asoka had the singular good fortune of being spared the difficult task of founding and organising an empire. That task was effectively executed by his grandfather, Chandragupta Maurya, who bequeathed to his successors an empire extending approximately from Afghanistan to Mysore. Territories which are even now outside the Government of India were parts of the Indian empire under Chandragupta; the four satrapies of Aria, Arochosia, Gedrosia, and the

<sup>1</sup> And also by the Ceylon kings named Vaṭṭikaṇāsika Tissa, Gajabāhukagāmini and Mahallaka Nāga in some inscriptions [Ep. Zeylanica, i. 60 f.].

<sup>2</sup> The full form of his title, in Sanskrit, Devānāṃpiyaḥ Priyadarśi Rājā, is not always used in the Edicts. In some it is shortened into only Devānāṃpiyaḥ [e.g. R.E. XII and XIII]. In the Bairat M.R.E., it is only Priyadarśi Rājā, and in the three Cave Inscriptions Rājā Priyadarśi, while in Maski it is Devānāṃpiya Asoka. The full form occurs in the Rummindei and Nigliwa Pillar Inscriptions, as also in Girnar (R.E. VIII).

<sup>3</sup> The other points furnished by the Edicts in favour of this identification are (1) the mention of Priyadarśi as a Māgadha king in the Bhabru Edict, (2) the reference to Pāṭaliputra as his capital in Girnar R.E. V, and (3) the reference to his contemporary Yona or Greek kings in R.E. II and XIII. It may be noted in this connexion that the Divyāvadāna in one passage [ch. xxvi] calls Asoka as a Maurya, and thus helps further the identification.

Paropanisadai, which Chandragupta wrested in about 304 B.C. from the empire of Selukos as the penalty for his ill-advised aggression. It is not known who conquered the south, whether Chandragupta or Bindusāra. Perhaps it was the former, in spite of his preoccupations with his wars in the north subverting the Nandan empire. For a definite and long-continued tradition describes Chandragupta abdicating and retiring as a Jain saint at Śravaṇa Belgola in Southern Mysore, up to which, therefore, his dominion must have extended.<sup>1</sup>

The extent of his empire may be, indeed, inferred from the geographical distribution of his Rock and Pillar Edicts. The former are at the following places : (1) Shāhbāzgarhi, near Peshwar ; (2) Mansehra, in the same locality ; (3) Kālsī, near Dehra Dun, at the confluence of the Tons and Jumna rivers, then a populous centre ; (4) Sopārā, in Thānā district, Bombay Presidency ; (5) Girnar, near Junāgarh, in Kathiawar, where the Edicts are inscribed on a rock on a lake, the Sudarśana lake of the Mauryan emperors ; (6) Dhauli, in Puri district, near Bhuvanesvara ; (7) Jaugada, on the Rīṣikulya river, in Ganjam district, where (as also at Dhauli) the two Kalinga Edicts are substituted for R.E. XI, XII, and XIII, as being locally more appropriate, though it is not clear why R.E. XIII treating of the Kalinga Conquest and its effects on the king's mind was considered unsuitable for publication in Kalinga ; (8) Chitaldroog, in Mysore, where the Minor Rock Edicts appear on hills on the Chinna Haggari river at three different localities, viz., Siddapura (supposed to be the Isila of M.R.E. I), Jatinga-Rāmeśvara and Brahmagiri ; (9) Rupnath, a place of pilgrimage, near Jubbulpur, where appears only M.R.E. I ; (10) Sahasram, in Bihar, with M.R.E. I only ; (11) Bairat, near Jaipur, in

<sup>1</sup> The conquest of the south by Chandragupta Maurya may also perhaps be inferred from the following statement of Plutarch [Life of Alexander, ch. lxii.] : " Not long afterwards Androkottos, who had by that time mounted the throne, presented Selukos with 500 elephants, and overran and subdued the whole of India with an army of 600,000." " The throne " in the context is the Magadhan throne, the occupation of which by Chandragupta is thus followed by two other events, viz., the defeat of Selukos, and the conquest of the remaining part of India not included in the Magadhan empire of the Nandas.

Rajputana, showing only M.R.E. I ; (12) Bhabru, with its special Edict which originally appeared on a second hill at Bairat ;<sup>1</sup> and (13) Maski (showing the M.R.E. I only), in the Nizam's dominions.<sup>2</sup> The Pillars bearing the Edicts stood at (1) Topra near Ambala, (2) Meerut, both of which were removed to Delhi by Sultan Firoz Taghlak ; (3) Kauśāmbī (removed to Allahabad probably by Akbar), where appear P.E. I-VI, the Queen's Edict, and Kauśāmbī Edict ; (4) Lauriya Ararāj (Rādhia in Champaran district) ; (5) Lauriya Nandangarh (Mathia), in the same district ; (6) Rampurwa in the same district ; (7) Sanchi, near Bhopal, bearing M.P.E ; (8) Sarnath, near Benares, giving M.P.E ; (9) Rummindei, in Nepal ; and (10) Nigliva, in Nepalese Tarai. Thus Asoka was justified in stating that " great is his dominion " [R.E. XIV], and calling his dominion as the whole earth, prithivī [R.E. V (Dhauli Text)].

Apart from the inscriptions,<sup>3</sup> his buildings, as will be ex-

<sup>1</sup> Whence it is called by Hultzsch the " Calcutta-Bairat Rock-Inscription," the block on which it appeared being now in Calcutta at the Asiatic Society.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Bhandarkar [Asoka, pp. 36, 37] points out that, while the fourteen Rock Edicts were engraved in the capitals of the outlying provinces of Asoka's empire, the Minor Rock Edicts mark out places which separate his dominion from that of his independent or semi-independent neighbours. Thus Dhauli and Jaugada were the cities of the Kalinga province ; Girnar was capital of Surāṣṭra ; Sopārā was the city of Aparānta ; Shāhbāzgarhī might be taken to be the chief town of the Yona province, and Mansehra of the Kambojas. The locations of the Minor Rock Edicts are mostly on the borders of the empire, and these are also stated to have been meant for the Antas or the independent neighbouring states.

<sup>3</sup> Besides these inscriptions on rock and pillar discovered and deciphered up to now at the different places mentioned, there are certain inscriptions noticed by the Chinese pilgrim, Yuan Chwang, which still remain to be discovered. Thus one of these was found by him on an Asokan Tope at Rāmagrāma [Watters, ii. 20] ; two were found by him on pillars at Kuśinagara ; a fourth was found by him on a pillar at Pāṭaliputra ; and a fifth on a pillar at Rājagṛiha. The pillars, together with their inscriptions, have not yet been found out. It should be noted, however, that neither of the Chinese pilgrims, Fa-hien and Yuan Chwang, has described the inscriptions they had noticed as the inscriptions of Asoka. They generally describe them as belonging to, and recording the events of, earlier times.

PLATE II.

LAURIYA ARARAJ PILLAR.

plained below, also testify to the extent of his empire. Those in Kashmir and Nepal show that these countries were parts of his empire. Yuan Chwang saw Asokan topes in Kapis (Kafiristan), Nagar (Jelalabad), and Udyāna in the north-west. In Bengal, the authority of Asoka is proved by his stūpa at Tāmralipti, the capital of Suhma, and the famous port of embarkation for voyages towards the south. According to Yuan Chwang, there was also a stūpa of Asoka in the capital of Samatāṭa or the Brahmaputra Delta, and others in different parts of Bengal and Bihar, viz., Puṇyavardhana (northern Bengal) and Kārṇasuvarṇa (modern Burdwan, Birbhum and Murshidabad districts) [Watters, ii. 184 f.]. Yuan Chwang refers to Asokan topes being erected at various places in the south, in Chola and Dravida, of which the capital, Kāñchipura, has been sought to be identified with the Satiyaputra country of the Edict. Indeed, the distribution of the Asokan topes as mentioned by Yuan Chwang is almost co-terminous with that of the inscriptions, and is equally significant of the vastness of his empire.

Lastly, the extent of his empire is also indicated by his own mention in the Edicts [R.E. II, V, and XIII] of the peoples on its borders. In the south, these are mentioned as the Cholas, Pāṇḍyas, the Satiyaputra and Keralaputra, who were all within his sphere of influence. Towards the north-west, his empire marched with that of the Syrian monarch, Antiochos [R.E. II], and hence extended up to Persia and Syria which were held by Antiochos, while it is also known how Asoka's grandfather, Chandragupta, had wrested from Selukos the provinces of Aria, Arachosia, Paropanisadaï and Gedrosia, which descended to Asoka as his inheritance. The peoples on the north-west frontiers who came within his sphere of influence are called Gandhāras, Kambojas and Yavanas (or Yonas), all in the modern north-western Frontier Province and the upper Kabul valley. We may also note how the empire is further marked out by several geographical names occurring in the Edicts. We have mention of the capital of the empire at Pāṭaliputra [R.E. V, Girnar], and of "outlying towns" [ib.], such as Bodh-Gayā [R.E. VIII], Kosāmbī [Allahabad Pillar E.], Ujjeni, Takkhasilā [K.R.E.], Suvarṇagiri, Isila [M.R.E.], and Tosali and Samāpā in the province of Kalinga [K.R.E.]. Thus we have a fairly definite idea of the limits of Asoka's empire in different directions. We may even hazard the conjecture that the empire was so large that Asoka did not live to visit all its parts, and inspect the execution of his inscriptions in different localities. This is apparent from the somewhat apologetic tone in which he refers to the imperfections of the Edicts, as written on the rocks, from the mere probabilities of the case, and not from direct personal knowledge. As a matter of fact, the actual imperfections are too insignificant to deserve any notice of the emperor in a special Edict [R.E. XIV]. That he could not thus travel through his empire seems all the more surprising when we remember how indefatigable was the emperor in the discharge of his administrative duties [R.E. VI], and how among such duties he included as his own innovation those of constant tours of inspection of the conditions of his people in different parts [R.E. VIII].

As Asoka himself says in his Rock Edict XIII, his only conquest was that of Kalinga. This was "when he had been consecrated eight years," i.e., in about 262 B.C. In this war with the Kalingas, "one hundred and fifty thousand persons were deported, one hundred thousand were slain, and many times that number died." The losses of the vanquished indicate the strength of their defence. We know from the earlier account of Megasthenes that the king of the Kalingas was protected by a standing army, numbering 60,000 infantry, 1000 cavalry, and 700 war elephants. This army must have been considerably expanded by the time of Asoka, when the number of casualties alone is stated to be at least 4 lacs (taking the number of those who ultimately succumbed to the wounds of war to be, say, 3 lacs). But the losses of the war to the defeated people of Kalinga were not confined only to the casualties. Asoka takes the more correct basis of the computation: he feelingly counts the suffering caused to the civilian population by "violence or slaughter or separation from their loved ones" (upaghāto vā vadho vā abhiratānām viniskramanam). The losses of the war in this ancient document are indeed computed on most modern principles under three heads : (1) the losses inflicted on the combatants by death, wounds or capture ; (2) the losses suffered by the families of the combatants thus affected ; and (3) the suffering caused to the friends of the bereaved or afflicted families [ll. 3-5 of the inscription]. Lastly comes the mental anguish of the sovereign, who has singly to bear the whole weight of his people's sorrows. As Shakespeare says, "Never did the king sigh but with a general groan!" Thus Asoka is most modern in his estimate of the cruelties of war as equally affecting the combatants and non-combatants, or the civilian element, in a society based upon the joint family as the unit. Such a society, as truly described by Asoka, comprises religious and secular classes—Brahmans and Śramaṇas, various other dissenters, and the regular householders living in the happy harmony of domestic and social life with the cultivation of proper relations towards elders and seniors, father and mother, preceptor, friends, comrades, supporters and relations, servants and dependents. This is typical Hindu Society to the present day. In a society so closely knit together, in a system of intimate relations, it is no wonder that a war affects the civilian population almost as much as those sent to the front—the bereaved relations of the dead, and the friends of their survivors.

This deep and delicate sensitiveness to the cruel consequences of war worked a revolution in the character of Asoka.<sup>1</sup> He became a changed man, both in his personal and public life. Says the Edict : "Directly after the conquest of the Kalingas, the Beloved of the gods became keen in the pursuit of Dharma, love of Dharma, and inculcation of Dharma. . . . The chiefest conquest is not that by arms but by Dharma (dharma-vijaya).” The violence of war seen in all its nakedness makes Asoka turn completely towards Non-Violence (Ahiṃsā) as the creed of his life. Thus he came to change his personal religion and definitely adopt

<sup>1</sup> Senart [Inscriptions, etc., p. 101] makes the interesting suggestion that the cruelties of this war which led to Asoka's real conversion to Buddhism might have supplied the material for the legendary descriptions of the atrocities of Chāṇḍāsoka.

Buddhism, which, of all the then prevailing religions of India, stood up most for the principle of non-violence. This fact about his religious history has to be studied along with what he says in his Minor Rock Edict I: "I was a lay-disciple (upāsaka) without, however, exerting myself strenuously. But a year—in fact more than a year ago—I approached the Order, and since then have exerted myself strenuously." Taking this passage along with that cited from Rock Edict XIII, we arrive at the following findings, viz., that (a) the suffering caused by his conquest of Kalinga made Asoka's zeal for Buddhism (dharma-kāmatā) very keen (tīvra); (b) that before the said conquest he had been a follower, though but an ordinary or indifferent, and not a zealous, follower of Buddhism; (c) that before the said conquest he had been a mere lay-disciple or upāsaka of the Buddhist church for more than two years and a half, i.e., during 265-262 B.C., becoming a convert to Buddhism in 265 B.C.;<sup>1</sup> and (d) that the conquest of Kalinga (262 B.C.) was immediately followed by his closer association with the Order and strenuous exertions on its behalf. He exerted himself strenuously for more than a year, i.e., from 262-260 B.C., when he issued the Minor Rock Edict I. The same year, 260 B.C., was associated not merely with his first Rock Edict, but also with the first of his "pious tours," probably that to Bodh Gayā, which took place "after he had been consecrated ten years, as stated in the Rock Edict VIII.

Next followed the publication of his main series of fourteen religious proclamations or messages to his people, which, according to Rock Edicts III, IV, and V, and also the Pillar Edict VI, took place twelve or thirteen years after his consecration, i.e., during 258-257 B.C.

The idea of issuing religious edicts is thus stated in the Pillar Edict VI:

"When I had been consecrated twelve years, I caused a

<sup>1</sup> This date is curiously confirmed by a passage in the Mahāvamsa [v. 37-48], which states that Nigrodha, born in the year of the death of his father, Prince Sumana, and of Asoka's accession to the throne converted Asoka when he was above seven years old, and after the seventh year of Asoka's accession, i.e., about 266 B.C.

scripture of the Dharma to be written for the welfare and happiness of mankind with the intent that they, giving up old courses, might attain growth in dharma, one way or the other."

Next, it struck him that he must so publish his Edicts that they may be read permanently. And so he declared his decision in the Minor Rock Edict I, the first of his Edicts, thus :

"And this very message is to be written on the rocks, and also, where there are pillars of stone, on such pillars also is it to be inscribed."

Thus we have his Edicts inscribed on rock and pillar, on enduring material, which enables us to hear to this day the moving voice of Asoka across the centuries. "For that purpose have I caused this scripture of the Law to be written in order that it may endure," says Asoka himself in his Rock Edicts V and VI.

The Pillar Edicts were preceded by the Rock Edicts of which the fourteenth and the last one is a sort of Epilogue explaining how they are written in a language "sometimes abridged, sometimes of medium length, and sometimes expanded. . . . There is also here something said again and again for the sweetness of the topics concerned that the people might thus follow it. There sometimes might also be writing left unfinished, taking into account the locality, or fully considering the reasons, or by the lapses of the scribe." The emperor also states : "Great is my dominion, and much has been written, and much shall I get written." The last phrase refers to the Pillar Edicts, which were yet to be issued. It may also be noted that in spite of the emperor's apologies for the imperfections of the inscriptions, there are very few imperfections left in their actual execution.

Thirdly, the emperor's religious change made itself amply felt in the domain of his personal life and habits. Most of the time-honoured customs and institutions of the royal household were abolished as being contradictory to the spirit of his new faith, and others more in consonance therewith were substituted in their place. Indeed, one of his Edicts [Pillar Edict VI] frankly expects that "men should give up their old ways." The royal tours of pleasure, accompanied by "hunting and other similar amusements," in which Asoka had indulged for nine years in his reign, now yielded their place to "tours of religion" accompanied by "visiting ascetics and Brahmans with liberality to them; visiting elders with largess of gold; visiting the people of the country (janapadasya) with instruction in Dharma and discussion of that Dharma" [Rock Edict VIII]. Next, he ordered that in the capital "no animal should be slaughtered for sacrifice, nor shall any merry-making be held, because in merry-makings is seen much that is objectionable." Further, in the kitchens of the royal household where "each day many hundred thousands<sup>1</sup> of living creatures were slaughtered to make curries," he ordered that only three creatures were to be slaughtered for the purpose, viz., two peacocks and one antelope, and later on, even the slaughter of these creatures was prohibited so as to render the diet of the palace exclusively vegetarian. It may be noted in this connection that the Ceylon tradition [Mahāvamsa, v. 34] represents Asoka as daily feeding 60,000 Brahmans for three years—a fact in keeping with what this inscription (Rock Edict I) says about the daily requirements of the royal table.

Fourthly, the emperor's religious change impressed itself upon his public policy and administration, too. The Kalinga war was the last political event of his reign, so to speak. The intensity of its violence produced a reaction in his mind towards the principle of non-violence, the principle of observing and enforcing peace not only between man and man, but also between man and every sentient creature. Thus, while the recent bloodiest war of history has only ended in a talk about preventing future wars, the Kalinga war was, for Asoka, the end of all war, although he was not free from the provocations to war from the many unsubdued peoples of India. His deliberate policy was now thus enunciated: "Even if any one does positive harm to him, he would be considered worthy of forgiveness by His Sacred

<sup>1</sup> Probably an instance of the exaggeration of which the Edicts are sometimes as guilty as the legends!

Majesty so far as he can possibly be forgiven " [R.E. XIII]. And his message in respect of the unsubdued borderers was " that the king desires that they should have no fear of me, that they should trust me, and should receive from me happiness, not sorrow " [Kalinga Edict II]. This is, in effect, the doctrine of the equality of all states, great and small, in sovereignty and liberty which the modern world is striving so hard to establish. But Asoka conceived it, and gave effect to it. Elsewhere he declares in self-satisfaction that " instead of the reverberation of the war-drum (bherī-ghoṣa) is now to be heard the reverberation of religious proclamations, dharmaghoṣa " [Rock Edict IV]. This is why so many states and peoples of India were left unconquered when they could be easily conquered by a sovereign of Asoka's paramount power and position: the Cholas, the Pāṇḍyas, the Satiyaputras, the Keralaputras [Rock Edict II], the Yavanas (Greeks), the Kambojas, the Nābhapantis of Nābhaka, the Bhojas and Pitinikas, the Andhras and Pulindas. All these are mentioned as lying outside his " conquered country " (vijita) or direct dominion [Rock Edict XIII]. He is anxious to ensure that " his sons and grandsons may not think it their duty to make any new conquests," and takes his firm stand upon the doctrine that " the chiefest conquest is that achieved by Dharma and not by brute force " (ib.). He evidently believed in the brotherhood of free peoples, but " they must turn from their evil ways that they may not be chastised " (Rock Edict XIII). He believed in the brotherhood in morality.

Thus forswearing, and forbidding by his sovereign injunctions, all wars in his empire, he extended the principle of Ahimsā or non-violence from the world of man to that of the lower dumb animals and birds. The full extension of the principle took place later in his reign, in about 242 B.C., when an ordinance or decree was issued, prohibiting the slaughter of numerous birds and beasts specified, besides " all four-footed animals which are neither utilised nor eaten," such as the cow, for example, which was never used as a pack-animal or for food in India. On certain specified days and on the Buddhist fast days were stopped the killing even of fish, the branding of horses and oxen, and "the castration of bulls, he-goats, rams, boars or other animals."

Connected with these measures may also be mentioned his humane arrangements for the relief of suffering of both man and beast, under which the state established botanical gardens for the cultivation of the medicinal plants, herbs, roots and fruits, procured, when necessary, even by importation and then acclimatised [Rock Edict II], besides maintaining hospitals or other arrangements for the supply of medicines and medical men for the treatment of diseases. Considering the emphasis laid upon the healing arrangements for beasts, we must infer that there was no lack in Asoka's time of veterinary surgeons and hospitals.

The same humanitarian instinct was in operation on a larger scale and in a wider sphere. Says the emperor in his Pillar Edict VII :

"On the roads, too, banyan trees have been planted by me to give shade to man and beast ; mango-gardens have been planted and wells dug at every half-kos ; rest-houses, too, have been erected ; and numerous watering-places were made here and there for the comfort of man and beast."

These comprehensive measures for the comforts of outdoor life were called for as much by the heat of Indian summer as by the fact that the Indians, the classes and the masses alike, the old as well as the young, are very much given to travelling, as much in the interests of business or trade as for religion which inculcates the duty of visiting on pilgrimage the holy places of India, covering by their number and geographical distribution the entire area of this vast country.

We have thus seen what unheard-of and unexpected effects were produced by his triumph in the Kalinga war upon a nature like Asoka's : that single conquest crushed out of him the lust for further conquests which makes empires to this day. The event bore a different message to him : "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther !" He now differently understood the mission of an emperor, which should be to establish an empire on the basis of Universal Peace, an empire resting on Right rather than Might. The war put an end to his political career properly so called. Henceforth he pursues religious ends, which explains the further events of his reign.

Before the Kalinga war, in about 265 B.C., he became a Buddhist, as we have already seen, beginning as an upāsaka. He remains such from 265-262 B.C., when his belief in the new faith becomes stronger as a consequence of his remorse, which came naturally to him as a Buddhist for the cruelties caused by the Kalinga war, and leads him on to a more intimate relationship with the Saṃgha. This, however, should not signify that he became a full-fledged Bhikkhu, as most historians have assumed. If that were so, the fact would have been more directly stated than by the indirect expression—saṃgham upagata, which refers to a condition intermediate between the upāsaka on the one hand and the fully-ordained Bhikkhu on the other, i.e., the Bhikkhu passing through the two stages of ordination known as Pabbajjā and Upasampadā. Asoka did not qualify even for the first stage of the monkhood by not going out of home into homelessness (pravrajyā). He did not renounce the world or his throne, but remained to rule, though in a spirit of being in the world and yet not of it. But that could not get over the technical requirements of the law on the subject. What, then, should be the meaning of the expression—"approaching the Saṃgha"? The meaning is perhaps explained by a passage in the Vinaya [iii. 7, 8, SBE.] which refers to the condition of a Bhikkhugatika as the intermediate one between an Upāsaka and the Bhikkhu. Buddhaghosa explains Bhikkhugatika to mean "a person that dwells in the same Vihāra with the Bhikkhus" without being a fully-ordained Bhikkhu, though he is on the way towards the full Bhikkhuhood.<sup>1</sup> A careful analysis of the tradition on the subject will, however, show that the expression “saṃghaṃ upagata” points to the stage when Asoka publicly declared himself to be a follower of the Saṃgha in the fourth year of his reign, and entered upon a career of direct service to the Saṃgha. In his previous stage, he had been only privately cultivating the company and receiving the instruction of an individual Buddhist teacher.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> I owe this suggestion to Mr. Charan Das Chatterji. I-tsing [Takakusu, tr. pp. 105 and 155 n.] refers to people residing in a monastery without being monks, "those upāsakas who come to the abode of a Bhikṣu chiefly in order to learn the Sacred Books and intending to shave their hair and wear a black robe" [ib. p. 155 n.]. I-tsing [ib. p. 73] also refers to an image of Asoka dressed in the robes of a monk, and this shows that he might have chosen to don the robes of a monk during his temporary visits to the Saṃgha. But

On coming into a closer connection with the Saṃgha, Asoka devoted himself strenuously to the new faith, and initiated several lines of activity on its behalf, the supreme objective of his endeavours being the moral uplift of the community. A year's strenuous exertion produced satisfactory results. As stated in M.R.E. I, the gods were popularised, so that the people in Jambudvīpa who knew nothing of them, i.e., the wild tribes, now became associated with them (taking the word misā<sup>2</sup> to be Sanskrit misra, to be mixed up with), and adopted them as objects of their worship.<sup>3</sup> A further appeal to the religious instincts of the people was made by the emperor's organisation of shows and the supposed representations of Asoka in the Sanchi sculptures show him dressed like a king and surrounded with all the paraphernalia of a king [see below].

<sup>1</sup> This point is fully explained in the annotations of the Edict.

<sup>2</sup> The word may also stand for Sanskrit mṛiṣā, false, in which case the sense of the passage will be that the popular faith of the times was purified by Asoka's propagandist work aiming at the replacement of the false gods (probably Brahminical gods) by the true ones (the Buddhist gods). Or, without committing Asoka to such a sweeping condemnation of Brahminism which is flagrantly inconsistent with his repeated inculcation of respect for Brahmins in the Edicts, we may as well interpret the false gods of the people in the Baconian sense of idols, so that Asoka's reform would mean a reform in the ideals of the people in respect of such vital subjects as True Conquest, True Charity, True Ceremonial and the like, as explained in the Edicts. The word misibhūtā occurring in Maski Edict supports the rendering of misa by misra, though the correct Prākṛit form for misra should be misso, on which see Childers. Generally, we must reject the interpretation which represents Asoka as a Buddhist iconoclast, as contrary to the lofty spirit of toleration the Edicts breathe.

<sup>3</sup> This is the interpretation of Thomas in Cambridge History. But see note on it under the inscription.

processions exhibiting images of the gods in their celestial cars, which were accompanied by elephants, bonfires or illuminations and other heavenly sights [Rock Edict IV]. Thus for military pageants and secular shows were substituted more edifying spectacles representing things divine. The images of the gods carried in procession need not refer to Brahminical gods only. They might be of Buddhist gods as well. The institution of Buddhist processions continued at Pāṭaliputra down to Fa-hien's time (fourth century A.D.). It is thus described by the Chinese pilgrim :

"Every year, on the eighth day of the second month, they celebrate a procession of images. They make a four-wheeled car and on it erect a structure of five stories by means of bamboos tied together. . . . They make figures of devas with gold, silver and lapis lazuli grandly blended. . . . On the four sides are niches, with a Buddha seated in each, and a Bodhisattva standing in attendance on him. There may be twenty cars, all grand and imposing, but each one different from the others" [Legge's tr., p. 79].

Thus Asoka seems to have been the originator of this institution, but it is extremely doubtful if he had included figures of the Buddha and Bodhisattvas in the processions, considering that in his time Buddhism was yet to develop image-worship or an elaborate pantheon, the gift of the much later form of Buddhism known as Mahāyāna. The procession of the images of gods points to the progress achieved in iconography in Asoka's time. We know from the famous Maurya passage in Patañjali's Mahābhāṣya [commenting on Pāṇini's Sūtra, v. iii. 99] how the Mauryan emperors traded upon the popular superstitions of the times by manufacturing portable images of the gods (archāḥ prakalpītāḥ Mauryaiḥ hiraṇyārthivih) and selling them to profit. But perhaps we may exonerate Asoka from this popular charge of greed of gold, considering that he made use of the images not for his own material advantage, but for the spiritual advantage of his people by bringing their gods before their eyes.

A second line of his activities in connection with the spiritual uplift of his people has been already referred to, viz., the issue of his Edicts in a permanent and popular form, whereby the emperor's lofty ideals of thought and conduct were constantly kept before the eyes of the people, so that they might become a national possession. In reviewing his own actions in this regard, he himself states [Pillar Edict VII]: "This thought came to me: In the past the kings had this wish—How may the people grow with a proper growth in piety? The people, however, did not have that growth. Whereby then can the people be made to grow in piety? Whereby can I elevate any of them by a growth in piety? . . . This thought came to me: 'I will publish precepts of piety, will inculcate instructions in piety: hearing these, the people will conform, will be elevated, and will grow strongly with the growth of piety.' For this purpose precepts of piety were published, manifold instructions in piety were enjoined. . . ."

But the emperor was not content with merely sending out these mute messages to his people. He thought of personally moving among them, preaching to them, and holding religious conferences and discussions with them. Such movements through the country among his people he calls "pious tours," which was Asoka's own innovation. For his predecessors knew only of pleasure trips and other objectionable amusements like hunting [Rock Edict VIII]. The first "pious tour" of Asoka, however, "whence arose the institution" (tenātra dharmayātrā), took place earlier than the issue of his Edicts, in the tenth year of his coronation (i.e., 260 B.C.), when he "went to Sambodhi" (ayāya Sambodhim). This might mean that he went to Bodh Gayā,<sup>1</sup> the place of the Buddha's sambodhi or enlightenment, on pilgrimage. We may recall that Asoka undertook this pilgrimage as a result of his increased devotion to Buddhism following the Kalinga war of 262 B.C., when he ceased to be an upāsaka and became a Bhikkhugatika, as already explained. The fact of his visit to Bodh Gayā and of his devotion to the Bodhi tree is also corroborated by a sculpture on the eastern gate at Sāncī, which, as interpreted by Foucher, represents the emperor's visit to the sacred tree.

Thus Asoka went on his first "pious tour" or pilgrimage

<sup>1</sup> Suggested by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar [IA, 1913, p. 159].

after " the increase of his faith in Buddhism " in 260 B.C. It was followed by many other pilgrimages, on which both legends and inscriptions throw some light. According to northern tradition confirmed by Yuan Chwang, Asoka's preceptor in Buddhism was Upagupta of Mathurā, the son of the perfumer Gupta of Benares, who took his imperial pupil, escorted by a mighty army, on an extensive pilgrimage to the principal holy places of Buddhism, viz., Lumbini Garden where the Venerable One was born, Kapilavastu where He renounced the world, Bodhi-tree at Gayā where He attained enlightenment, Isipatana (Sarnath) where He first preached, Kuśinagara where He died, Śrāvastī where He mostly lived and taught, and where were the stūpas of some of His chief disciples like Sāriputta, Maudgalāyana and Ānanda. At each of these places, true to his own words in his Rock Edict VIII, the emperor gave largesses of gold and built also a chaitya. The birthplace of the Buddha is identified with Rummindei, four miles inside the Nepal frontier, by the discovery of an Asokan pillar bearing an inscription which states that it was set up to commemorate the Buddha's birthplace. The inscription indicates that it was drafted and incised by the local authorities in commemoration of the emperor's visit and gifts to the place, and not directly by the emperor, like most other Edicts.

Thus both legends and inscriptions confirm one another as regards Asoka's pilgrimage to two places, Bodh Gayā and Lumbini.

An additional place not included in the traditional list of pilgrimages is mentioned by another inscription discovered on a pillar at Nigliwa, also in the Nepalese Tarai, which runs in the following words :

" By His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King, consecrated 14 years, was enlarged to double its original size the stūpa of Buddha Koṇākamana ; and by him, consecrated (twenty years), coming in person, and reverence being made, was set up (a stone pillar)."

Thus from these pillar inscriptions we gather that Asoka started on an extensive pilgrimage in 250 B.C. Considering the locations of Asokan pillars at Lauriya-Ararāj, Lauriya-

Nandangarh, Rampurwā, Rummindei and Nigliva, we are tempted to infer that they only mark the stages in the pilgrim's progress along the royal road from his capital, Pāṭaliputra, to Nepal.

These "pious tours" through the country, which Asoka first inaugurated, he did not confine to himself. He imposed them upon his higher officials—the great ministers (mahā-mātras) and city magistrates (nagaravyāvahārakas) as well—as part of their official duties. This was done by about 258 B.C., the date of Rock Edict III, and is adumbrated in the two separate Edicts at Dhauli and Jaugada in Kalinga which first refer to the king's intentions in this regard. Rock Edict III states :

"When I had been consecrated twelve years this command was issued by me : Everywhere in my dominions, my officers, the Yuktas, Rājūkas (provincial governors 'set over many hundreds of thousands of people,' as defined in Pillar Edict IV), and Prādeśikas (district officers)—must go out on tours (anusamīyāna) by turns, every five years, as well for their other business as for this special purpose, the inculcation of Dharma."

This imperial decree served upon his officers is foreshadowed in the first Kalinga Edict, which is, therefore, slightly prior in time to Rock Edict III definitely embodying the decree, and thus prior to the entire series of fourteen Rock Edicts. The passage presaging the decree runs thus :

"And for this purpose, in accordance with the Dharma, I shall send out in rotation every five years officers known for their freedom from harshness, violence of temper, and for sweetness in action (slākṣṇārambha, which may also mean 'considerate towards animal life')."

In the case of some of the remoter provinces, such as those governed from Ujjain and Taxila under the Princes as Viceroys, the emperor wanted the periodical tours of the selected officers to be more frequent, once every three years. Perhaps the greater frequency of the tours was necessary in those provinces as being more populous than the newly-annexed province of Kalinga with its strong element of “forest folks” in its population, and hence less civilised and more sparsely peopled [Rock Edict XIII].

Next year, when “he had been consecrated thirteen years,” i.e., in 257 B.C., this scheme of religious tours by his officials was further expanded and systematised by the institution of a special body of officers charged with the duty of attending to the moral and spiritual welfare of all his subjects, officials and non-officials, Buddhists and non-Buddhists, and even the royal relations at Pāṭaliputra and provincial towns (vāhyeṣu cha nagareṣu). These officers called by the new and very appropriate title of the Dharma-Mahāmātras constituted a separate department of government service which did not exist before (na bhūtapurvāḥ) and was entirely Asoka’s innovation. The activities of this department extended over a wide field, even beyond the limits of his direct jurisdiction or administration,<sup>1</sup> “to the Yavanas, Kambojas and Gandhāras, and other nations on the western frontier,” and also to the “Rāṣṭrikas, Pitinikas” [Rock Edict V], with Nābhapantis, Bhojas, Andhras and Pulindas in other parts of India [Rock Edict XIII], and, as such, the department must have been adequately manned with an army of officers. The department had also to send out some officers as Dūtas, envoys or ambassadors, carrying Asoka’s religious message to foreign countries both in the north and the south—to the neighbouring and distant states of Antiochos Theos of Syria, and of the four kings, Ptolemy Philadelphos of Egypt, Antigonos Gonatas of Macedonia, Magas of Cyrene, Alexander of Epirus; and lower down (nīcha), in the south, to the Cholas and Pāṇḍyas as far as Tāmraparṇī or Ceylon. In a word, the imperial officers worked both “in the dominions of His Majesty the Emperor as well as among his frontagers (pratyanteṣu),” as neatly and briefly put in Rock Edict II.

As regards their functions, they are indicated in the Rock Edicts II, V, and XIII. The organisation of measures for the relief of suffering of both man and beast, as mentioned in Rock Edict II, must have been the work of this department. They seem to have been responsible for the various works of public utility—hospitals, supply of medical men, medicines, drinking water and rest-houses for travellers, etc.—as indicated in Rock Edict II and detailed in Pillar Edict VII. The reason for this assumption is that in Rock Edict XIII is mentioned how the conquests of the Law have been won in countries outside his empire through the work of his dūtas, while the nature and details of the conquests are given in Rock Edict II. Their other functions are detailed in Rock Edict V. They are to be employed (a) among all sectaries to establish them in the new faith, (b) among those already religious (dharma-yuktasya) for increase of their piety (dharma-vriddhi) and for their welfare and happiness, (c) among servants and dependents, Brahmins, the rich and the destitute, and the old and infirm, for their welfare and happiness; and for a similar purpose among the peoples on his frontiers such as the Yavanas, Kambojas, Gandhāras and other nations in the north-west and Rāṣṭrikas and Pitinikas (in the interior); (d) to secure the pious people (dharma-yukta) from worry; (e) to avert (unjust) imprisonment or execution, or other molestation, and procure release or relief in justifiable cases; <sup>1</sup> (f) in the capital and in the provincial towns, in all the female establishments of the emperor's brothers, sisters, and other relatives.

<sup>1</sup> As Sir R. G. Bhandarkar first pointed out (in his Early History of the Deccan), the peoples that are mentioned by name in the Edicts are to be regarded as independent or semi-independent peoples. They would not have been named, had they been Asoka’s subjects.

<sup>1</sup> The Kalinga Edict I which is earlier than this Edict, as shown below, thus contemplates cases calling for interference in the administration of justice: "Again, it happens that some individual incurs imprisonment or torture, and when the result is his imprisonment without due cause, many other people are deeply grieved. In such a case you (the Prefects of the town) must desire to do justice. . . . For this purpose has this scripture been here inscribed in order that the administrators of the town may strive without ceasing that the restraint or torture of the townsmen (paribodha and parikleśa) may not take place without due cause." The same Edict also announces the remedial measures which Asoka contemplates for miscarriage of justice: "And for this purpose, in accordance with the Moral Law, I shall send forth in rotation every five years such persons as are not harsh, not violent, but are of sweet behaviour." Those measures first adumbrated here are given effect to in Rock Edict V.

“ Thus these Dharma-mahāmātras are employed everywhere in his dominions among the pious, whether zealous for Dharma (dharma-nīśrita), or established in Dharma (dharmādhiṣṭhita) or duly devoted to charity (dānasam-yukta).”

The supervision of the female establishments of the members of the royal family in the metropolis and the mufussil towns, as mentioned under (f), was later on entrusted to a separate body of officials called the Strī-adhyakṣa-mahāmātras, as stated in Rock Edict XII.

Pillar Edict VII gives further information on the functions of the Dharma-Mahāmātras as indicated in the other Edicts :

“ Dignitaries of piety were appointed by me in charge of manifold indulgences (anugrahikeṣu), these both for ascetics and for householders ; also over all sects were they appointed—over the Saṅgha, Brahmans, Ājīvikas and Nirgranthas.”

“ These and various other classes were appointed in charge of the distribution of charity (dānavisarge), both my own and that of the queens. And in my whole harem they carry out in manifold fashions such and such measures of satisfaction, both here and in all quarters. The same has been done as regards the distribution of charity on the part of my sons and the other princes (sons of the devis or queens).”
[F. W. Thomas in the Cambridge History.]

There is a short edict following the Sarnath Pillar Edict, which indicates how the charities of the royal family took the form of “ a mango-garden or pleasure-grove or almshouse.”

To sum up : these Dharma-mahāmātras were appointed to spread the dharma, mitigate the wrongs or rigours of justice, administer the charities of the king and the royal family, supervise the morals of their harems, and superintend the affairs conducted by the committees or councils (pariṣad) governing different sects, Buddhist, Jain, Ājīvika and others.

Thus the promotion of the moral welfare of his peoples was considered by Asoka as one of the first cares of the state, and a special department of administration was created for the purpose. He is also one of the very few monarchs in history who thought of extending this work of moral propagandism to the peoples of foreign countries. Rock Edict XIII makes express mention of the many independent, and quasi-independent, states, both on the borders of the empire, and beyond, in which the missionaries deputed by him achieved success in their work. The date of the Edict being about 258 B.C., Asoka's missionary activity in the foreign countries mentioned in that Edict must date from an earlier time, and more so because it is described in the Edict as having been already successful and borne fruit. One of the results achieved was the extension to these foreign countries of the emperor's arrangements for providing medical aid for men and animals as stated in Rock Edict II. Thus we must allow adequate time for the development of these results before 258 B.C. The earlier date of the mission is also pointed to by the reference in Rock Edict XIII to the five Hellenistic kings as being Asoka's contemporaries, but they could not all be counted as his contemporaries later than 258 B.C., the last date when they were jointly alive. Thus this date marks the latest chronological limit for Asoka's missions in foreign countries. That this work was in full swing and even extended in about 253 B.C. is evident from the Mahāvamsa which gives additional interesting information on the whole subject.

The Mahāvamsa (v. 280) relates that in the seventeenth year of Asoka's coronation was held at Pāṭaliputra, under the presidency of the monk Moggaliputta Tissa (in the northern texts, Upagupta), the third Buddhist Council, and when he brought the Council to an end, "he sent forth theras, one here and one there," whose names are thus given, together with the countries they were sent to [Ib. xii. 1-8] :

Missionary	Country
1. Majjhantika	Kashmir and Gandhāra <sup>1</sup>
2. Mahārakṣita	Yavana <sup>2</sup> or Greek Country

<sup>1</sup> Mentioned in R.E. V.

<sup>2</sup> Mentioned with the Kambojas in R.E. V and XIII. It is interesting to note that the Græco-Bactrian kingdom was founded about this time, in 246 B.C., by Diodotus.

Missionary	Country
3. Majjhima	Himalaya <sup>1</sup> Country
4. Dharmarakṣita (a Yavana)	Aparāntaka <sup>2</sup>
5. Mahādharmarakṣita	Mahārāṣṭra <sup>3</sup>
6. Mahādeva	Mahiṣamaṇḍala <sup>4</sup> (Mysore or Māndhātā)
7. Rakṣita	Vanavāsi <sup>5</sup> (North Kanara)
8. Sopā and Uttara	Suvarṇabhūmi <sup>6</sup> (Pegu and Moulmein)
9. Mahendra with Rīṣṭriya, Utriya, Sambala and Bhadrasāra	Laṅkā (Ceylon)

This list is also repeated in the Samantapāsādikā, which, however, adds some interesting details. It appears that Majjhima went to Himavantapradeśa, then divided into five districts or rāṣṭras, not alone, but with four other associates, viz., Kassapagotta, Alakadeva, Dundubhissara and Mahādeva (but the Dīpavaṃsa names Kāsapagota Kotiputa as the chief, and Majjhima, Dudubhisara, Sahadeva, and Mūlakadeva as his assistants), and the evangelisers adopted as the text of their discourses the Dhammachakkappavattana Suttanta, and converted eight million souls. Similarly,

<sup>1</sup> The Nābhapaṃtis of Nābhaka, mentioned along with the Yonas in Rock Edict XIII, might perhaps be a Himalayan people. See note under the Edict.

<sup>2</sup> The Pīṭinikas are described as an Aparānta people in R.E. V. Literally, Aparānta means "the other or western ends."

<sup>3</sup> The Andhras and Pulindas (located about the Vindhya in the Āturya Brāhmaṇa), as well as the Rāṣṭrikas, may be taken to be peoples of Mahārāṣṭra (R.E. V and XIII).

<sup>4</sup> The Satiyaputras (R.E. II) would belong to this part. According to Rice [JRAS. 1916, p. 839] Mahiṣa-maṇḍala was South Mysore.

<sup>5</sup> The Edicts mention more definitely the South Indian peoples among whom the imperial missionaries worked, viz., the Choias, Pāṇḍyas, Keralaputras.

<sup>6</sup> According to Fleet [JRAS. 1910, p. 428], this should be the region in Bengal called Karṇasuvarṇa by Yuan Chwang, or the country along the Son river known as Hiraṇyavāha, "the gold-bearer."

Yonaka Dhammarakkhita discoursed on Aggikkhandopamā Sutta,<sup>1</sup> converting 37,000 in Aparānta, Majjhantika on Āsivisūpamāsutta,<sup>2</sup> converting 80,000 in Kashmir and Gandhāra; Mahādeva on Devadūtasuttanta<sup>3</sup> in Mahimsakamaṇḍala, converting 40,000; Rakkhita on Mahānārada-kassapajātaka,<sup>4</sup> converting 84,000 in Vanavāsi; Mahārakkhita on Kālākārāmasuttanta<sup>5</sup> in Yonaraṭṭham; and Soṇa and Uttara on Brahmajālasuttanta,<sup>6</sup> converting 60,000 in Suvannabhūmi.

These lists show that, apart from the legends being in general agreement with the inscriptions as regards the countries that came within the purview of Asoka's missions,<sup>7</sup> there was an important extension of the operations of these missions to some new regions not mentioned in the inscriptions, as a result of the enthusiasm for the faith roused by the nine months' session of the third Buddhist Council. As regards the names of the individual missionaries, the truth of the legends has been unexpectedly confirmed in some inscriptions found on the Stūpas of Sanchi of the second or first century B.C. In Stūpa No. 2 at Sanchi was found a relic-box of white sandstone, on the side of which runs the following inscription in early Brāhmī characters: "(the relics) of all teachers beginning with the Arhat (?) Kāsapagota and the Arhat (?) Vāchhi Suvijayata"; while inside

<sup>1</sup> I.e., "The Discourse on the Parable of the Flames of Fire," found in Anguttara, IV. pp. 128-135.

<sup>2</sup> "The Simile of the Serpent," in Ang. II. pp. 110-111.

<sup>3</sup> I.e., "Discourse on the Messengers of God," which treats of Old Age, Disease, and Death as messengers of Yama, the god of death. It is found in Majjhima, III. pp. 178-187, and Ang. I. pp. 138-142.

<sup>4</sup> Fausboll, Jāt. vi. pp. 219-255.

<sup>5</sup> Geiger [Mahāv. tr. p. 85] takes it to "be the Suttanta 24 of the Chatukkanipāta in Ang. II. pp. 24-26," and the Kālākārāma as the place where the Buddha is supposed to have delivered this discourse.

<sup>6</sup> I.e., "The Net of the Religious" in Dīgha, I. p. 1 ff.

<sup>7</sup> It must be noted that the credit of these foreign missions, which belongs to the king according to the Edicts [R.E. XIII, expressly mentioning his despatch of dūtas to foreign countries, and R.E. II mentioning the work of these foreign missions as regards supply of medical aid], is appropriated by the clergy in the Mahāvamsa.

the relic-box were found four caskets of steatite containing fragments of human bone, the relics of the following teachers named in inscriptions on the lids of those caskets, viz.,

1. Kāsapagota, “ the teacher of all the Hemavatas.”
2. Majjhima.
3. Hāritīputa.
4. Vachhi Suvijayata (Vātsi-Suvijayat ?).
5. Mahavanāya.
6. Āpagīva.
7. Kōḍinīputa (Kaundinīputra).
8. Kosikiputa.
9. Gotiputa (Gauptīputra).
10. Mogalīputa (Maudgalīputra).

Of these teachers, Nos. 1 and 2 were the missionaries for the Himalayan region, while the rest were the teachers who took part in the third Buddhist Council under Asoka under No. 10, i.e., Mogaliputa (Moggaliputta Tissa), as President. No. 2, Majjhima, is also mentioned in the superscription of a relic-casket found in Stūpa No. 2 at Sonāri, and No. 1 in another from the same stūpa under the name Kotiputta, while in a third urn-inscription, No. 9, Gotiputta, is mentioned along with Dadabhisāra. Thus the inscriptions corroborate the names of the following missionaries of the legends, viz., Kāsapagota, Majjhima, and Dundubhissara.<sup>1</sup>

While the Edicts are silent about Mahendra's mission to Ceylon, the legends are full of details describing the event. The first intercourse of Ceylon with Asoka's empire was due to the initiative of King Devānampiya Tissa of Ceylon, who sent a mission which reached Tāmralipti by a week's voyage and Pāṭaliputra from there in another week's time. Then followed Asoka's mission to Ceylon under his son Mahendra and his grandson Sumana (son of his daughter Saṅghamitrā). A second mission then came from Ceylon to Asoka, asking for the services of his daughter Saṅghamitrā and for a branch of the sacred Bo-tree, which was duly despatched to Tāmra-lipti harbour under the escort of an army led by the emperor in person. The Tree was then embarked in a vessel and carried to Ceylon. This event, according to the legends, took place in the eighteenth year of Asoka's reign, i.e., in 252 B.C. A yet third mission, under his grandson, Sumana, came to Asoka from Ceylon for the purpose of taking some relics which were enshrined in a stūpa in the island.

<sup>1</sup> See Sir John Marshall's Guide to Sanchi, ch. x. The reference from the Samantapāsādikā I owe to Mr. C. D. Chatterji.

The truth of this legend about Asoka's mission to Ceylon seems to be confirmed by a piece of archaeological evidence. A fresco on a wall in one of the caves at Ajanta is supposed to depict the event. So far as the Edicts are concerned, Ceylon is mentioned as Tāmraparṇī in R.E. II and XIII, and as the country already included by Asoka in the list of countries to which he despatched his Dūtas or Messengers to prosecute his scheme of Dharma-Vijaya or Moral Conquest. Thus by the time of these Edicts (258-257 B.C.), Ceylon was already a sphere of Asoka's missionary activities which, according to R.E. II, included welfare work and positive social service such as measures for the relief of suffering of beast and man. As the date of Mahendra's work in Ceylon was much later (252 B.C.), a reference to it was not possible in Asoka's Edicts, which, however, tell of his relations with Ceylon that must have prepared the ground for Mahendra's work.

Considering the frequency of intercourse between Ceylon and Magadha, we may reasonably infer that the means of such intercourse were found in the development of an Indian shipping. Vincent Smith holds the same view: "When we remember Asoka's relations with Ceylon and even more distant powers, we may credit him with a sea-going fleet" [The Edicts of Asoka, p. viii].

The last datable event of Asoka's reign was the publication of his seven Pillar Edicts in the twenty-seventh [P.E. I, IV, V and VI] and twenty-eighth year [P.E. VII] of his reign, i.e., 243-242 B.C. The length of his reign being thirty-six to thirty-seven years, according to the concurrent testimony of the Brahman and Buddhist historians, it must have closed about 232 B.C.<sup>1</sup> The chronological scheme of his reign thus works itself out as follows :

PLATE III.

LUMBINI PILLAR.

274 B.C.—Accession.

270 B.C.—Coronation.

265 B.C.—Conversion to Buddhism as a lay disciple or upāsaka.

265-262 B.C.—Two and a half years of indifferent devotion to Buddhism.

262 B.C.—Conquest of Kalinga, followed by his closer connection with the Saṃgha and strenuous exertion for his progress in his new faith.

260 B.C.—Issue of Minor Rock Edict I, and first “ pious tour,” probably to Bodh Gayā (R.E. VIII) ; addressing the Bhabru Edict to his Church ; popularising the gods (Minor R.E. I, as interpreted by some scholars).

259 B.C.—Issue of the two Kalinga (separate) Edicts.

258-57 B.C.—Issue of the fourteen Rock Edicts in one corpus ; grant of cave-dwellings in the Barabar Hills to the Ājīvikas.

257 B.C.—Institution of the officers called Dharma-Mahāmātras [R.E. V].

256 B.C.—Double enlargement of the Stūpa of Buddha Koṇākamana.

250 B.C.—Pilgrimage to Lumbini Garden, the birthplace of the Buddha ; visit to the Stūpa of Buddha Koṇākamana, and erection of commemorative pillars at both places.

243-2 B.C.—Issue of Pillar Edicts.

232 B.C.—Death of Asoka.

<sup>1</sup> The Divyāvadānā (p. 430) gives an account of Asoka's last days. In his old age Asoka nominated as his successor his grandson, Samprati, the son of Kuṇāla ; but this prince, under the influence of the high officials who had usurped all power, stopped the benefactions to the Buddhist Church of Asoka who had been now a nominal sovereign, and even reduced the services and allowances for the king until at last he sent him half an āmalaka fruit on an earthen plate. On receiving this, Asoka remarked in sadness to his courtiers that from the lordship of the entire Jambudvīpa he had now sunk to that of a half-fruit ! This tradition is also alluded to by Yuan Chwang [Watters, ii. 99]. It would thus appear that the last days of the great emperor were far from being happy with his disloyal officers and his hardly less disloyal grandson conspiring against him.

The fourteen Rock Edicts show that the following measures were passed before the date of the Edicts, and were therefore passed between 260-258 B.C. :

(1) Abolition of

- (a) Sacrificial slaughter of animals in the capital.
- (b) Samājas (merry-making of a kind, accompanied by animal fights, feasting with consumption of meat, etc.).
- (c) Slaughter of animals for the royal table, except two peacocks and one antelope (more rarely used for food) [R.E. I].
- (d) "Tours of pleasure" accompanied by "hunting and other similar amusements" [R.E. VIII].
- (e) War [R.E. IV]<sup>1</sup> and conquest [R.E. XIII].

(2) Provision of public works of utility, viz. :

- (a) Hospitals for man and beast.
- (b) Botanical gardens for the culture of medicinal plants, indigenous and foreign (obtained by import)—including "herbs, roots and fruits."
- (c) Wells and trees on the roads for the comforts of travellers and animals [R.E. II].

(3) Supply of medical aid and facilities for both man and beast in foreign countries (those of Antiochos and even of his neighbours) and in countries on the borders [R.E. II] ; which implies

(4) Organisation of missionary work in foreign countries, which were objects not of his political or military but religious conquests (dharma-vijaya), achieved by his missionaries (dūtas) [R.E. XIII].

(5) Institution of Quinquennial Circuits of Officers for missionary, as well as administrative, work [R.E. III] ; which afterwards leads to the

(6) Creation of a new and separate Department of Missionary Service under officers styled Dharma-Mahāmātras, <sup>1</sup> In the declaration that the call to arms by sound of drum (bheri-ghoṣa) is replaced by a call to duty by its proclamations (dharma-ghoṣa).

Ministers of Religion or Morals, for propagation of piety among his subjects (including royal relations, male and female), as also among foreign peoples [R.E. V].

(7) Institution of a new and separate set of officers called Strī-adhyakṣa-mahāmātras (ministers in charge of the superintendents of women) [R.E. XII], for the purpose of supervising female morals. This edict, engraved as it is on a separate boulder at Shahbazgarhi, must have been so engraved for its special applicability to the people of that locality whose attention was independently drawn to it.

(8) Institution of the king's own pious tours among his people, accompanied by royal gifts to ascetics, Brahmans, men disabled by age, and by holding religious conferences for preaching and discussing the Moral Law.

(9) Organisation of religious shows and processions replacing secular ones [R.E. IV].

From the Pillar Edicts (243-42 B.C.) we gather that the following further measures were taken before their dates :

(1) Regulations restricting slaughter and mutilation of animals and birds specified [P.E. V]. Cf. " On two-footed and four-footed beings, on birds and denizens of the waters, I have conferred various favours, even unto the boon of life " [P.E. II].

(2) Grant to Governors independent jurisdiction as regards Law and Justice [P.E. IV].

(3) The judicial reform granting reprieve of three days to convicts sentenced to death [P.E. IV].

(4) Institution of jail-deliveries on the anniversaries of the emperor's coronation [P.E. V].

(5) Completion of the full programme of public works which comprised :

(a) Planting of shade-giving banyan-trees and groves of mango-trees on the roads.

(b) Providing wells at every half-kos of the roads.

(c) Construction of rest-houses.

(d) Providing watering-places for use of man and beast [P.E. VII].

Regarding now the initial date of Asoka's accession or coronation, we arrive at same by different ways. Firstly, he himself indicates a point of chronological contact between his own history and that of no less than five Western kings, mentioned as his contemporaries in R.E. XIII, whose dates are known beyond doubt. Thus we deduce the unknown from the known. All these kings, as we know from their history, continued to be Asoka's contemporaries down to the year 258 B.C., when one of them, viz., Magas of Cyrene, died, if not another, viz., Alexander of Epirus [Cambridge History of India, vol. i. p. 502]. Granting that the news about such distant kings might take about a year in those days to travel to Pāṭaliputra and reach the ears of Asoka, his reference to all these contemporaries as being jointly alive could not have been very much later than 257 B.C., considering that another Western contemporary of his deserved a mention about 250 B.C., when an independent Greek kingdom was founded by Diodotus in Bactria [ib.] Thus 257 B.C. may very well be taken as the year of Asoka's reference to his Western royal contemporaries in R.E. XIII, and, therefore, may be taken as the date of this Edict itself. Now R.E. III refers to a certain decree of the king (ājñāpitam) promulgated in the twelfth year of his coronation; R.E. IV refers to the matter of this Edict being inscribed (lekhāpitam) in the same twelfth year; while R.E. V refers to an important administrative measure of Asoka (the creation of Dharma-Mahāmātras) being introduced in the thirteenth year after his coronation. Lastly, in P.E. VI we have the definite statement of the king that his body of Dharma-lipis was inscribed (dharmā-lipi lekhāpitā) in the twelfth year of his coronation. On the basis of all these references, it is reasonable to infer that all his Rock Edicts (along with the measures referred to therein) must have been issued during the twelfth and thirteenth year of his coronation, and that they could not have been issued earlier than the dates of the incidents they record. Thus if 257 B.C. was the date of R.E. XIII, it was, at the latest, the thirteenth year of Asoka's coronation which thus took place in 270 B.C. Accepting now the truth of the tradition recorded in Mahāvamsa, v. 22, that there was an interval of four years between his accession and coronation, we obtain 274 B.C. as the date of his accession. It is again to be noted that we arrive at the same date for Asoka's accession through a very different source. The Purāṇas assign a reign of twenty-four years to his grandfather, Chandragupta Maurya, i.e., a reign up to 299 B.C. from 323 B.C., the probable date of his achievement of sovereignty, and to his father Bindusāra, a reign of twenty-five years, i.e., up to 274 B.C., the date we obtain from the other sources for Asoka's accession to the throne. The date 274 B.C. for Asoka's accession is again confirmed by a curious piece of evidence furnished by a passage in the Mahāvamsa [v. 45], which states that Nigrodha, then only seven years old, converted Asoka to Buddhism in the seventh year of his reign, and was also born in the year when his father, Prince Sumana, was killed and Asoka ascended the throne. When different lines of inquiry lead to the same conclusion, all the assumptions and hypotheses taken for granted in the course of the inquiry stand confirmed.

Quite recently, however, a radically different view is taken<sup>1</sup> about these dates of Asoka, and about the inner chronology of his Edicts. It has been argued that the Pillar Edicts are prior to the Rock Edicts, because P.E. VII, issued in the twenty-seventh year of his reign as a résumé of the various measures undertaken by him on behalf of his Dharma, is silent about the most important of such measures recorded in R.E. II, V, and XIII, viz., the welfare work and moral propagandism organised by Asoka in the foreign countries under the Greek rulers. Arguments from silence are always unreliable, and in the present case seem to be specially so. What is stated about the scope or intention of P.E. VII is not stated in the Edict itself, but is a mere assumption. It is inferred from the contents of the Edict. The contents would rather lead one to infer that the Edict was meant to be a résumé of the various domestic measures introduced by Asoka for the moral uplift of his own people, and not of what he had done for foreign peoples. All these, which are also mentioned in the R.E., are mentioned in this

<sup>1</sup> By Harit Krishna Deb, M.A., in his paper on Asoka's Dhammalipi and by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar in his Asoka.

Edict with a degree of elaboration and generalisation that is almost a sure indication that it was issued later than the R.E. The chief officers mentioned in the R.E., viz., the Rājūkas and the Dharma-Mahāmātras, are also mentioned in P.E. VII; the functions of these newly-created Dharma-Mahāmātras, which are fully described in R.E. V, are summarised in P.E. VII; the information about the public works of utility consisting of "wells and trees planted along the roads for the needs of both man and beast," as given in R.E. II, is elaborated and supplemented in P.E. VII in a manner that undoubtedly points to the latter being later than the former; lastly, as instances of generalisation and reference in the P.E. VII to the R.E., may be mentioned the statement that for the spread of the Dharma, Asoka has had religious messages (dhamma-sāvanāni) proclaimed (sāvā-pitāni) and religious injunctions (dhammānusathini vividhāni) ordained (ānapitāni), along with his Pillars of Piety (dhammathambhāni) and the special officers to preach and expound (paliovadisanti pavithalisanti) the Dharma. There is also the other generalised statement in the same Edict that the growth in Dharma of the people may be accomplished in two ways, by Dhamma-niyama, by regulation, and by Nijhati, reflection. Thus the contents of P.E. VII, viewed as a whole, show without doubt that it is meant to sum up Asoka's moral measures for his people, and, as such, it was the last of his Edicts. Above all, arguments from the inclusion or omission of certain matters in the two classes of Edicts cannot be conclusive. Does not Asoka himself warn us on the point—"Nacha sarvaṃ sarvatra ghaṭitam," "nor is all suitable in all places"?

It is also possible to find in the other Pillar Edicts indications of the priority to them of the Rock Edicts. They refer to the term Puruṣa as a general name, not used in the Rock Edicts, for all government servants of high, low, or middle rank [P.E. I, IV, and VII]. Though the Antas are referred to in the M.R.E. I and Rock Edicts II and XIII, the officers created to work among them, and called Anta-Mahāmātras, are first mentioned in P.E. I. Again, P.E. IV gives to the Rājūkas more powers than are mentioned under R.E. III, and also some of the powers in regard to Law and Justice which are given to the Dharma-Mahāmātras in R.E. V. Further, while the Rock Edicts in a general way insist on non-violence towards living beings [R.E. I, III, IV, IX, and XI], it is left to one of the Pillar Edicts [P.E. V] to specify those to be specially protected.

The Rock Edicts also give indications of a chronological order among themselves. The Minor Rock Edicts are taken to be prior to the Rock Edicts, as both in the Rupnath and Sahasram versions, there is a reference to the king's order that the Edicts should be incised on rock and pillar, thus presaging both the Rock and Pillar Edicts. Next comes the Bhabru Edict, which is addressed to the Saṃgha directly and not through its Mahāmātras, who are put in charge of the Saṃgha under R.E. V, and mentioned as such in M.P.E. at Sanchi and Sarnath. Then come the two special Kalinga Rock Edicts with their anticipation of the appointment, for checking abuses of justice, of special officers who are afterwards called Dharma-Mahāmātras in R.E. V, and are also indicated in R.E. III. Thus among the Rock Edicts themselves, as has been shown above, R.E. III is prior to R.E. V. Thus the Rock Edicts must have been issued between 258 and 257 B.C. in two stages or chronological orders. Again, R.E. XII seems to be later than R.E. V; while the latter assigns the supervision of women to the Dharma-Mahāmātras, the former mentions a special class of officers for the work, viz., the Strī-adhyakṣa-mahāmātras.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Quite recently, a novel view of the chronology of the Edicts has been propounded in his Asoka Edicts in New Light by Dr. B. M. Barua, who considers (a) the Rock Edicts to be earlier than the Pillar Edicts, (b) the Kalinga Rock Edicts later than the Pillar Edicts, and (c) the Minor Rock Edicts as the latest. This view has been dealt with in the annotations of the Edicts.

APPENDIX A.

ON ASOKAN CHRONOLOGY FROM THE LEGENDS

THE chronology of Asoka's life and reign as presented in his inscriptions may be usefully compared with that revealed in tradition, both southern and northern, as preserved in texts like the Mahāvamsa and the Divyāvadāna. The two systems of chronology, though derived from different sources, will be seen to present many points of contact or agreement. Starting from the established chronological point of 270 B.C. as the date of Asoka's anointment as emperor, we can work out the dates of the following events, arranged in their chronological order, in his life and history :

304 B.C.—Birth of Asoka (inferred from the date of birth of his eldest son given below).

286 B.C.—Asoka sent out by his father, Bindusāra, from Pāṭaliputra, as his Viceroy, to Ujjayinī [Mahāv. xiii. 8-11] (at the age of eighteen).

286 B.C.—Asoka's marriage with Devī of Vedisa (Besnagar, Bhilsa) [Ib.].

284 B.C.—Birth of Asoka's eldest son, Mahendra [Ib. v. 204].

282 B.C.—Birth of Asoka's eldest daughter, Saṅghamitrā [Ib.].

274 B.C.

(1) War of Succession.

(2) Death of the Crown Prince Sumana.

(3) Asoka's accession to the throne.

(4) Birth of Prince Sumana's posthumous son, Nigrodha [Ib. 40-50].

270 B.C.—Asoka's Coronation [Ib. 22].

270-266 B.C.—Asoka's younger brother, Tissa, as his Vice-regent (uparāja) [Ib. 33].

270-240 B.C.—Asandhimitrā as Asoka's agramahiṣī, Chief Queen [Ib. 85 ; xx. 2].

268 B.C.—Saṅghamitrā married to Agnibrahmā.

267 B.C.—Birth of Asoka's grandson Sumana, son of Saṅghamitrā [Ib. v. 170].

266 B.C.

(1) Conversion of Asoka to Buddhism by Nigrodha, then only seven years old [Ib. v. 45].

This date is important (a) as demonstrating that the years mentioned in the Mahāvamsa are to be counted from Asoka's coronation (as done by V. A. Smith), and not from his accession (as taken in the Cambridge History, p. 503) ; (b) as furnishing another proof of the date of Asoka's accession being correct ; and (c) as confirming the date derivable from M.R.E. I. of Asoka becoming a Buddhist upāsaka.

(2) Asoka converts his brother, Tissa, his Vice-regent, to Buddhism [Ib. 160].

(3) Tissa ordained by Mahādhammarakkhita [Ib. 168].

(4) Agnibrahmā, nephew and son-in-law of Asoka, ordained [Ib. 170].

(5) Appointment of Prince Mahendra as Vice-regent in place of Tissa [Ib. 202] (at the age of eighteen).

266-263 B.C.—Building of vihāras and chaityas by Asoka [Ib. 173 ; Div. xxvii].

264 B.C.

(1) Ordination of Mahendra by the thera Mahādeva, with Majjhantika as president of the chapter performing the Kammavāccham ; second ordination of Mahendra by Moggaliputta Tissa as his upādhyāyā.

(2) Ordination of Saṅghamitrā by her ācharyā Ayupālā and upādhyāyā Dhammapālā [Mahāv. v. 204-209].

(3) Promotion of Asoka from the status of a pachchayadāyaka to that of a sāsanadāyaka [Ib. 197].

263 B.C.—Birth of Kuṇāla, son of Asoka's wife, Padmāvati [Div. xxvii.].

262 B.C.—Death of the monks, Tissa and Sumitta, followed by increase in the number of undesirable members in the Saṅgha and the consequent retirement of Moggaliputta Tissa [Mahāv. v. 227-30].

262-254 B.C.—The Saṅgha under the headship of Mahendra ; recall by Asoka of Moggaliputta Tissa, who taught him the doctrine of the Sambuddha ; meeting of the Saṅgha under him and expulsion of heretical monks by Asoka [Ib. 231-274 ; cf. Sanchi and Sarnath Pillar Edicts].

260-250 B.C.—Possible period of Asoka's pilgrimage to Buddhist holy places which followed his completion of the dharmarājikas according to Div. xxvii., which states that Asoka was taken by his preceptor Upagupta first to Lumbini Vana and afterwards to Bodhimūla. R.E. VIII refers to Asoka's visit to Sambodhi in 260 B.C., and the Rummindei Pillar Edict to his visit to Lumbini in 250 B.C.

253 B.C.—Meeting of the Third Buddhist Council under Moggaliputta Tissa, and despatch by him of missionaries to different countries [Mahāv. xii. 1-8].

252 B.C.—Mahendra on way to Ceylon visits his mother Devī at Vedisa [Ib. xiii. 1. 8-11], when already twelve years a monk.

240 B.C.—Death of Asandhimitrā, " the dear consort of Asoka and faithful believer in the Sambuddha " [Ib. xx. 2].

236 B.C.—Tiṣyarakṣitā raised to the rank of Chief Queen [Ib. 3 ; also Div. xxvii., where she is mentioned as Asoka's agramahiṣī].

235 B.C.—Kunāla sent out as Viceroy to Taxila, then in revolt [Div. p. 407].

233 B.C.—Tiṣyarakṣitā's jealousy against the Bodhi-tree, which she tries to destroy [Mahāv. xx. 4-6 ; also referred to in the Div. without the date (p. 397, Cowell's ed.)].

232 B.C.—Death of Asoka in the thirty-eighth year of his reign [Mahāv. xx. 1-6].

CHAPTER III

ADMINISTRATION

WE have now given an account of the principal events and measures in Asoka's life and reign. We shall now describe his work as an administrator, religious reformer, and builder.

The government of India under Asoka was an absolute monarchy in the legal and political sense of the term. Nevertheless, autocracy in India was much more limited in many directions than the autocracies of the West. "The Indian king is no sultan with the sole obligation of satisfying his personal caprice. The origin of royalty is the growth of wickedness and the necessity of chastisement, the virtue of which the Indian writers celebrate with a real enthusiasm. It is as guardian of the social (including domestic and religious) order and defence against anarchial oppression that the king is entitled to his revenue ; failing to perform this duty, he takes upon himself a corresponding share of the national sin. Educated in these precepts among a moralising people, he would have been more than human had he escaped the obsession of this conception of his duties. Hence we not seldom hear on royal, as well as on priestly, lips the expression that the king should be the father of his people" [Cambridge History of India, vol. i. p. 491]. But apart from this living sense of his moral responsibility to his people, there was an important limitation upon his autocracy from the fact that he was not the source of Law, but rather its support. Sacred law, according to Manu and other legal authorities, is derived from four sources, viz., (1) the Vedas, (2) the Smṛitis, (3) the practices of the pious (śiṣṭāchāra), and (4) the opinions of the pious on doubtful points, while the sources of secular law were the manifold groups and communities which legislated for themselves, so that "Whatever may have been practised by the virtuous, and by such twice-born men as are devoted to the law, that only he shall establish as law if it be not opposed to the laws of castes, communities (jānapada), guilds, and families [Manu, viii. 41, 46]. As I have explained elsewhere [Nationalism in Hindu Culture, London, 1920, p. 99], "it is the quasi-instinctive postulates and conventions of group-life which come to be formulated as law, and not the mandate, command, or decree, of a single, central authority in the state. Law, under these conditions, is not an arte-fact, but a natural growth of consensus and communal life." The fact of the matter was that the defects of personal rule were very largely remedied by the king's own submission to the laws which he had no hand in making or annulling, so that the impersonal rules were the real rulers in the country. In Asoka's case, the sovereign was theoretically only an autocrat, for he proceeded much farther than the law-books to prescribe limitations upon his own authority by adding to his own duties and responsibilities, and emphasising the supremacy of moral laws even in the secular spheres of life. A great emphasis is laid upon the paternal principle of government in his Edicts: "All men are my children; and, just as I desire for my children that they may enjoy every kind of prosperity and happiness both in this world and in the next, so also do I desire the same for all men" [Kalinga Edict II]. He wants the newly-subdued Kalingas "to grasp the truth that 'the king is to us as a father; he loves us even as he loves himself; we are to the king even as his children'" [ibid.]. But this abiding sense of parental responsibility for his people was not confined to the king alone. It belonged to his agents, too, to whom he committed the care of his people "as a man would make over his child to a skilful nurse and, feeling confident, says to himself: 'The skilful nurse is eager to care for the happiness of my child'; even so my Governors have been created for the welfare and happiness of the country"

[Pillar Edict IV]. A king with these ideas of his position and responsibility is practically more representative of his people than the so-called representative assembly or legislature in a regular democracy. Here "the Head of the State represents the people directly and primarily in his person, whether, as in the case of the Mikado or of a Hindu Sovereign, as the symbol of the Shinto, the Dharma or the Law, in hereditary succession and transmission,—or, as in the case of the President of the United States, as the elected representative of the people's sovereignty, standing in an even more direct and vital relationship to the people than the members of the Representative Assemblies and Legislatures." <sup>1</sup> His relationship to the people is more natural and primary, more direct and intimate, than the legal, factitious, and consensual relationship of the electorate and the elected in modern democracies. Indeed, the Head of the State and his people are but integral parts of one corporate and constitutional unity. A democracy only seeks to embody the unitary, undivided sovereignty in a body politic and its various limbs and organs, the various political assemblies and organisations, but in practice it has realised its ideals only partially, in different degrees, in even the most democratically advanced countries of the west. The defects of democracy show that the problem of government cannot be solved by representative or electoral methods alone, but by the processes of organic growth which it can stimulate by encouraging all vital modes of association prevailing among the people concerned. Thus, "one of the characteristics of the present-day political theory is its reaction against the state, and a salient political fact to-day is the increasing amount and power of group-life—trade unions, professional societies, citizens' leagues, neighbourhood associations, etc." [M. P. Follet's New State]. Ancient Hindu monarchy did not aim at centralisation or over-government, but gave full scope to the varieties of group-life to which the people have been used from time immemorial, even prior to the emergence of a centralised government among them. Thus it was an autocracy limited from below by a vast subterranean democracy, so to speak, a complete system of local self-government embodied in various types of institutions.

<sup>1</sup> Report on Mysore Constitutional Reform by Sir. B. N. Seal, Vice-Chancellor, Mysore University.

Asoka did not spare himself in trying to realise his high conception of imperial duties and responsibilities. He was an ideal public servant, the most hard working of all his officials. He gave himself to public business at all hours and places. Says he in Rock Edict VI: "A long period has elapsed during which in the past administrative business or information was not attended to at all hours. So by me the arrangement has been made that at all times, when I am eating, or in the harem, or in the bedroom, or in my ranches, or even in the place of religious instruction, or in my pleasure-grounds, everywhere the reporting officials should make known to me the people's affairs. In all places I shall attend to public business." He says further [ibid.]: "I never feel satisfaction in my exertions and dispatch of business. For work I must for the welfare of all the folk; and of that, again, the root is energy and the dispatch of business; for nothing is more essential than the welfare of all the folk." Hardly has a king emphasised more his obligations to his own subjects! The Brahminical sacred texts insist on three debts which every man is born to and which he must discharge, the debts to his religion (devarīṇa), to the Ṛṣis (i.e., to learning) and to his ancestors (whose race is to be perpetuated), but Asoka says that a king has a fourth debt to pay: "And whatsoever efforts I make, they are made that I may obtain release from my debt to my fellow-human beings" [ibid.]. The sovereign of a large empire, Asoka also recognised his duty of touring the country—touring not for sport or pleasure as his predecessors did, but for "the inspection of the country and the people" (jāna-pādasya janasya darśanaṃ) [R.E. VIII]. But his empire was so extensive that he could not visit all its parts, as is apparent from a passage in the Rock Edict XIV, where he assumes that in some of his Edicts "something has been written incompletely by blunders of the writer." These blunders in his published Edicts are merely supposed by him: he could not have referred to them if he had actually examined them on the spot, for there are hardly any such glaring blunders in so many of his separately executed and located Edicts.

The empire was divided for administrative purposes into a number of provinces, of which the more remote ones were placed under Viceroy. The Viceroyalties were generally reserved for the Princes called Kumāras or Āryaputras in the Edicts. The Edicts refer to four princely Viceroy, viz., those governing the provinces with headquarters at Taxila, Ujjain, Tosali and Suvarṇagiri [Kalinga Edict I; Kalinga Edict II, Dhāuli version; Minor Rock Edict I, Brahmagiri version]. Gandhāra is mentioned by Fa-hien as another viceroyalty under Prince Dharmavivardhana. Since Dharmavivardhana, according to Divyāvadāna, was another name for Kuṇāla, who was sent out by Asoka towards the end of his reign as his Viceroy to Taxila for subduing its hostility, we may take it that the province of Gandhāra had its headquarters at Taxila. Sometimes, instead of the Princes, we find local chiefs appointed as Viceroy. Thus Puṣyagupta, the Vaiśya, was Chandragupta's Viceroy (Rāṣṭrīya) of the western provinces with Girnar as headquarters, which, under Asoka, came under another Viceroy named Raja Tusāspha, the Persian [Rudradāman's inscription in Ep. Ind., viii. pp. 46-7]. The more centrally situated provinces were placed under Governors directly appointed from the capital by the king, and are perhaps marked out by the Pillar Inscriptions, while the Rock Inscriptions are to be found in the outlying regions of the empire.

While the Edicts do not name any Viceroy, the legends name some. When Bindusāra was emperor, he appointed his two sons, Susīma (or Sumana) and Asoka, as his Viceroy at Taxila and Ujjayinī respectively. When later, Taxila was in revolt which could not be suppressed by Susīma, Asoka was transferred there as more competent for the purpose. Prince Kuṇāla, as we have already seen, is mentioned as Asoka's Viceroy at Taxila. The emperor on his consecration is also said to have appointed as his deputy or Viceregent (Uparāja) his younger brother, Tiṣya, who, on his retirement as a religious devotee, was succeeded by Prince Mahendra, though he remained in office only for a short time prior to his ordination [Mahāv. v. 33]. Probably the Viceregent (Uparāja) was something like the Prime Minister and different from Yuvarāja, heir-apparent. Bindusāra, Asoka's father, had, as his Prime Minister, Agrāmātya, Khallātaka, who is said to have supported Asoka in his contest for the throne. Tradition gives to Asoka himself a trusted minister named Rādhagupta, who also helped him in gaining the throne and in his administration, and was his Agrāmātya (the term used in the Divyāvadāna).

The Viceroy, too, had their own ministers. The northern books tell us how the people of Taxila during the reign of Bindusāra revolted against the oppressive ministers, and not against the princely Viceroy. In the legend of Kuṇāla, the Viceroy of Taxila, it was the ministers who received the spurious dispatch from headquarters, directing that he be blinded. The Kalinga Edict II shows how the Viceroy, like the king, were empowered to appoint their own officers of the status of Mahāmātras for periodical inspection and supervision of judicial administration.

That Viceroy was associated with Mahāmātras or Ministers is also shown by the Minor Rock Edict I, Brahmagiri text, and the Kalinga Edict I, Dhauli text. In the former the Prince (Āryaputra), acting with his Mahāmātras, addresses the king's message to the Mahāmātras of Isila; in the latter, the king addresses the Prince and the Mahāmātras together. Again, the Jaugada text of the Kalinga Rock Edict II mentions a class of Mahāmātras who are described as Lājavachanikas, i.e., those who were entitled to receive the king's messages directly, and not through the royal Viceroy. Thus these Mahāmātras might be regarded as Provincial Governors, as they are given independent charge of their province. Samāpā (Jaugada) or Isila [M.R.E. I, Brahm.] was the seat of such a governorship, as Tosali was of a vicerealty. In the same way, the Kauśāmbī Edict is addressed by the king directly to the Mahāmātras of Kauśāmbī, which must have been, therefore, the headquarters of another province. Perhaps these Mahāmātras were distinguished from the other classes of Mahāmātras by the designation, Prādesika Mahāmātras. The term Prādesika (Provincial Governor) is used in R.E. III for a class of officers who were expected to tour through their charges completely every five years, just as the Mahāmātras are required to do in K.R.E. I. And so these Prādesikas had really the status of a Mahāmātra. Strictly speaking, the charge of a Prādesika-Mahāmātra was like the Commissioner-ship of a Division, as P.E. IV makes the Rājūka the Provincial Governor proper.

The ordinary Provincial Governors were called Rājūkas who were "set over hundreds of thousands of souls" [P.E. IV, R.E. III]. The office of the Rājūkas had been in existence before Asoka, but Asoka invested them with greater authority. They are granted independence in their administration of Law and Justice in order that they may perform their duties confidently and fearlessly, bestow welfare and happiness upon the people of the country, and confer favours upon them. They will also know of their joys and sorrows. As the child is committed confidently to a skilful nurse, the people are committed to the care of these Governors who are created for their welfare and happiness with intent that fearlessly, unselfishly, and cheerfully, they may discharge their duties [P.E. IV].

Sometimes, however, these lofty ideals of duty set before the Governors were not realised. Cases of their neglect of duty or indifference to his injunctions called forth vigorous but dignified protests from the emperor, like the following : "With certain natural dispositions success (in administration) is impossible, to wit, envy, lack of sustained efforts, harshness, haste, want of application, indolence, and lassitude. You must desire that such dispositions be not yours. At the root of the whole matter lie steadiness, and patience. He who is tired in administration will not rise up, but one must needs move, advance, go on. There will be special officers to remind you of your obligations to the king and of his instructions. Fulfilment of these bears great fruit, non-fulfilment brings great calamity. By those who fail, neither heaven nor royal favour can be won. By fulfilling my instructions you will gain heaven and also pay your debt to me " [Kalinga Edict I]. In these we probably hear the very words of Asoka, still bringing home to us his impassioned exhortations across the centuries. Lest his words be forgotten by those for whom they are meant, the emperor, besides having them indelibly engraved on the rocks, ordered that they be recited publicly " at the beginning of each season of four months, (i.e., each of the three seasons, hot, rainy and cold) on the Tiṣya day, (i.e., when the moon is in that constellation) " [K.E. II], nay, even once a month on the Tiṣya day, and in the intervals between the Tiṣya days, and on fit occasions even to a single person [K.E. II].

Thus Asoka's government was from the very nature of the case partly imperial, i.e., directly under the emperor, and partly local, i.e., under the Viceroys and Governors. The charge of a Viceroy was more extensive than that of a Governor. Details are wanting as regards the extent of the administration which the emperor took upon himself as his own work. From the Edicts we may infer that the emperor's first duty was to settle the fundamental principles on which he wanted his government to be based, the policy to be pursued by his administrators, and to issue his notifications for them from time to time as occasion arose. In Asoka's case, the Imperial Edicts announcing his policy, principles, and the measures to be taken for their realisation remain permanently gazetted on " tables or pillars of stone." Thus the subject of legislation seems also in certain matters to have been imperialised. The laws of the realm passed by Asoka on his own initiative have been already indicated from the Edicts. Thirdly, the subject of the public works of utility seems also to have been an imperial concern from the account of the same already given. Fourthly, the Department of Dharma was also under the imperial government. The Ministers of Morals (Dharma-Mahāmātras) do not appear to be provincial officers, as their work embraced the entire area of the empire, and even areas outside of it. Fifthly, the Buddhist Church came to be one of the concerns of Asoka who practically assumed its temporal leadership, as will appear from the several Edicts bearing on the subject [the Bhabru Edict, and the Pillar Edicts of Sārnāth, Kau-śāmbī and Sānchī]. These Edicts announce the imperial decree fixing the penalty for those who promote schism in the church and the means of its publication and enforcement. Lastly, Asoka made periodical touring through his empire as one of his duties, as he insisted it upon all his local officers.

It is apparent that the emperor could not depend upon himself alone for the satisfactory discharge of these manifold and heavy duties and responsibilities which he had fixed for himself. His general supervision of the work of government was exercised with the aid of a special set of officers—his private secretaries, who were to report to him on the affairs of the people at all hours and places, and were thus called Paṭivedakas [R.E. VI]. Next, the emperor was also assisted in his administrative work by his Privy Council or Pariṣad, referred to in his Rock Edicts III and VI. The number of the Cabinet is not known. Kauṭilya makes it depend on the requirements of administration. According to tradition, Bindusāra had a Privy Council of 500 members.

The inscriptions indicate how the king's administrative orders were issued. They are called śāsanam (hevāmiyaṃ śāsane in Sarnath P.E.) and anusāsanam or anusiṣṭam (hevaṃcha Devānaṃpiyasa anusathi in K.R.E. I). They were written down (likhita) by the Lipikara [cf. lipi-karāparādhenā in R.E. XIV; and Chapaḍena likhitam lipikareṇa in M.R.E. II] in accordance with the king's words [Devānaṃpiyasa vachanena in K.R.E. II (Dhauḷi)] in documents called lipi [cf. ikaṃcha lipim (Sarnath M.P.E.) and ayaṃ dhammalipi lekhāpita of the R.E. and P.E.]. When the king's order was proclaimed, it was called śrāvaṇam [cf. iyaṃ cha sāvaṇe sāvāpita in M.R.E. I, Brahm.]. The preamble to the king's orders was of the form, "Thus saith the king" (evamāha, as in many R.E. and P.E.) or "thus ordains the king" (mayā idaṃ āṇapitam, R.E. III; or Devānaṃ piye āṇapayati, M.R.E. I). The first form, according to Kauṭilya (II. 10), applies to prajñāpāna-lekha, and the second to ājñā-lekha, i.e., writs of information and command respectively.

As regards the Provincial Governments, some sort of a general scheme is indicated in the Edicts. The head of the administration, the highest local officer, was the Rājūka, while a smaller jurisdiction was placed under the Prādesīka,<sup>1</sup> the divisional commissioner. There were also the Heads of Departments, called Mukhas in Pillar Edict VII, and also known by the general title of Mahāmātras,<sup>2</sup> while the department assigned to them was indicated by its name being prefixed to that title. The Edicts tell us of the Dharma-Mahāmātras in charge of the Department of Morals, the Strī-adhyakṣa-Mahāmātras in charge of the affairs of women, and the Anta-Mahāmātras in charge of the frontiers [P.E. I]. The Mahāmātras in charge of cities were called Mahāmātra-nāgarakas or Mahāmātra-Nagaravyavaharakas [the Kalinga Edicts]. Where the name Mahāmātra is used by itself without any prefix, it denotes the Ministers (as in Kalinga Edict II, Dhauḷi text, or Minor R.E. I]. This sense is also borne out in a passage in Rock Edict VI, where the king is said to entrust matters of urgency to the Mahāmātras for discussion by the Council of Ministers, Parīṣat, of which the Mahāmātras are also members. Lastly, the Mahāmātras were also deputed abroad to work as the king's dūtas or ambassadors, not merely in the frontier states among the Antas, but also in foreign states, viz., those of the five Greek kings, the Choḍas and Pāṇḍyas, and the island of Ceylon, as mentioned in R.E. V and XIII.

Thus there was organised a regular Civil Service assisting the Viceroy and Provincial Chiefs. The Civil Servants were called by the general name of Puruṣas [P.E. I, IV and <sup>1</sup> Rock Edict III mentions the "Yuktas, Rājūkas and Prādesīkas," probably in an ascending order of rank, as is evidently done in P.E. VII in mentioning the Rājūkas after the Puruṣas. In that case, the Prādesīkas might be provincial officers administering some specified interests of the whole province. F. W. Thomas takes the Prādesīka to be the same as the Pradeṣtri, "head of the executive revenue and judicial service" [JRAS, 1914, pp. 383-6], and the Rājūkas to be officers in charge of such subjects as "survey, land settlement, and irrigation," as suggested by the title itself [rajjugrāhakas=land-measurers, as used in Pāli works; see Cambridge History, pp. 487, 508]. See the notes on these terms below.

<sup>2</sup> Mahāmātras as Heads of Departments had their offices or secretariats in buildings called Mahāmātriya by Kauṭilya [II. 5].

VII] and are distinguished as being of high, low, or middle rank [P.E. I]. In Pillar Edict IV, the Puruṣas are differentiated from the Rājūkas as a separate body of officers who were acquainted with the wishes of the king, and whose duty was to exhort the Rājūkas into loyal service of the king, while in Edict VII they are spoken of as being "set over the multitude" (vahune janasi āyatā) contrasted with "the many hundred thousands of souls" under the charge of the Rājūkas. Thus the Puruṣas might have been like the secret agents, the gūḍha-puruṣas of Kauṭilya, or the inspectorate of the government. The Civil Servants of subordinate ranks are called Yuktas [R.E. III]. The Yuktas were like the Secretaries whose duty, as indicated in R.E. III, was to codify royal orders in the office of the Mahāmātras or Ministers under the instructions of the Pariṣad or Council to which they were attached. They had also to accompany their official superiors on tour. The scribe, lipikara, is also mentioned [Minor R.E. II, Brahmagiri version].

There seems to have prevailed the system of tours by government servants, high and low. In the case of the Viceroyalties of Ujjain and Taxila, the rules of service provided for such tours every three years for the Mahāmātras (K.R.E. I], while the usual rule in other provinces was to have them every five years [Ib. and R.E. III]. The officers sent out on such tours included the Yuktas, the Rājūkas, and the Prādeśikas [R.E. III].

Frontier administration, too, was successfully tackled by the employment of methods suggested by its special circumstances and problems. In general, the paternal principle of government was specially emphasised in dealing with the subdued and "unsubdued borderers" alike, and also with the backward communities, the forest folks [the Kalinga Edicts]. The frontiers were in charge of the Anta-Mahāmātras already mentioned, whose exact duties are not indicated in the Edicts. But they are mentioned by Kauṭilya, who calls them Antapālas. Their duty was to impose the transit dues (vartanī) on imported goods, and after examining their quality to stamp them with their seals [II. 21] and pass them on to the Superintendent of Tolls. They had also to make good losses to merchants by thefts committed within their jurisdiction.

Lastly, there must have been some officers to look after the public works of utility about which Asoka was so keen, though but few of them are mentioned in his Edicts. The Vraja [R.E. VI] must have been the charge of the Vraja-bhūmika [R.E. XII], who might also have within his purview the public parks, udyāna [R.E. VI], mango-groves, āmrvātikā [P.E. VII], wells, kūpa [R.E. II] or udapāna [P.E. VII] and travellers' rest-houses, niṣadyā [P.E. VII and Cave Insc. III.], along the public roads, patha or mārga [R.E. II]. There must have been horticulturists, too, to look after the botanical gardens for the growth of medicinal plants, and medical officers to arrange for the chikitsā or treatment of the diseases of both man and beast, manuṣya-chikitsā and paśu-chikitsā [R.E. II]. The king's nāga-vana, elephant forest [P.E. V], must have been under an officer like the Hastyadhyakṣa of Kauṭilya [II. 31], for elephants were "the special property of the king," as noted by Megasthenes.

As regards the policy of the empire, it may be summed up in Asoka's message : "The chiefest conquest is the conquest of Right and not of Might" [R.E. XIII]. First, war was abolished within the empire by one stroke. The sovereignty of the smaller states and weaker peoples was respected as a matter of principle. To the many "unsubdued borderers" of the empire went forth the healing message : "The king desires that they should not be afraid of him, but should trust him, and would receive from him not sorrow but happiness" [K.E. II]. Nor was subjection forced on the ruder peoples on the plea of civilising them : "Even upon the forest folk in his dominions His Sacred Majesty looks kindly" [R.E. XIII]. So rang through the country the message, loud and clear, repeated on rock and pillar, the message of freedom, of peace on earth and goodwill among men. Silenced was the war-drum : the bherī-ghoṣa was drowned in the dharma-ghoṣa ! [R.E. IV]. But we must note that Asoka attached a condition to his gift of freedom. Freedom must go with morality. While anxious "to secure the confidence of the borderers," he was equally anxious "to set them moving on the path of piety" [K.E. II]. The forest folks are distinctly "bidden to turn from their evil ways that they be not chastised" [R.E. XIII]. Secondly, while military conquest was forsworn, the moral conquests of the good king grew apace. These were undertaken as parts of the daily work of administration. And they were spreading not merely among his own peoples, but also in the foreign countries on his borders and beyond. Thus his international relations were governed by principles that still remain to be recognised. The barriers that divide nations could not stand before his sense of universal brotherhood. Thus we find this good king, centuries ahead of his times, carrying on welfare work among the citizens of other states by the expenses borne by his own state ! [R.E. II].

CHAPTER IV

RELIGION

WE shall now discuss Asoka's religion. At the outset, we must distinguish what was his personal religion from the religion he sought to preach and introduce among his people by his public measures.

His personal religion may be taken to be Buddhism, although there is a view that it was Jainism. That he was a Buddhist is apparent from several of his Edicts and other proofs. In the Minor R.E. I, he tells us of the stages in his progress towards Buddhism ; and, according to the reading of M.R.E. I, Maski and Rupnath, by Hultzsch, he also openly declares himself in that Edict to be a "Śākya," and a "Buddha-Śākya," i.e., a Buddhist ; in the Bhabru Edict he speaks with an air of authority over the church, pointing out several passages from the scriptures to be recited and meditated by the monks and nuns, and also by the laity, male and female, and declaring his faith in the Buddhist Trinity · in the Minor Pillar Edicts at Sārnāth, Kauśāmbī and Sāñchī, he stands out as the Defender of his Faith, and proclaims the penalties for schism ; while, according to tradition,<sup>1</sup> he himself held a <sup>1</sup> Tradition also testifies to Asoka's devotion to the Buddha by his seizure of his relics by opening the stūpas in which they were enshrined and redistributing them among the 84,000 stūpas of his own creation. The relics were originally in the possession of the Mallas of Kusinārā, where the Buddha died, but they were forced to share the relics with seven other claimants who made a hostile combination for the purpose. These seven claimants were : Ajātaśatru of Magadha, the Lichchhavis of Vaiśālī, the Śākyas of Kapilavastu, the Bulis of Allakappa, the Koliyas of Rāmagrāma, a Brahman of Vethadīpa, and the Mallas of Pāvā. This "War of the Relics"

PLATE IV.

FIGURE OF ELEPHANT CARVED ON STONE AT KALSI.

Council which defined the canon under the presidency of Moggaliputta Tissa, who produced the Kathāvatthu treatise for the purpose. There are also other facts pointing to the same conclusion: his pilgrimage to the holy places of Buddhism, his various measures for protecting animal life, his abolition of meat diet for the royal household, and abjuration of all amusements connected with the pain, or slaughter, of animals; his abolition of bloody sacrifices [R.E. I], his observance of the Uposatha Buddhist holidays [P.E. V], and his appointment of the Dharma-mahāmātras to look after "the interests of the Saṃgha" (Samghathasi), as distinctly specified, and not for their supervision, as is implied by the expression used for the other sects [P.E. VII]. Lastly, we may note Asoka's attachment to a definite Buddhist symbol in the Edicts, the symbol of the White Elephant,<sup>1</sup> indicated by an inscription at Girnar at the end of R.E. XIII, and represented by a figure cut on the rock at Dhauḷi and incised at Kalsi with the label gajātame, "the most perfect elephant." The elephant recalls the Buddha descending in that form into the womb of his mother,<sup>1</sup> so represented in the Sanchi sculptures, was settled by the intervention of Droṇa, the Brahmin. Centuries later, Asoka revived this war on the relics in another form by opening the stūpas in which they were deposited, but failed of his purpose at the Stūpa of Rāmagrāma against the defence of its heroic guardians, the Nāgas. The scene is depicted on one of the gateways of the Great Stūpa at Sanchi, showing the emperor approaching in his chariot with his army of cavalry, infantry and elephants. Other proofs of Asoka's Buddhism are the numerous stūpas said to have been erected by him all over the country from Kapil to Orissa to enshrine the Buddha's relics or mark the places hallowed by his visit or association, as mentioned in Yuan Chwang's account (noticed later); or his daily practice of offering worship at the stone at Pāṭaliputra bearing the Buddha's footprints, as related by Yuan Chwang [Watters, ii. 92].

<sup>1</sup> The descent of the Bodhisattva into the womb of his mother is referred to in texts like Dīgha Nikāya, II. (pp. 12-13, 55), or the Jātakas ["Bodhisatto setavaravāraṇo hutvā . . ." (Fausboll, i. 50)], and in the Bharhut inscription, Bhagavato ūkramti, and is represented in sculpture at Bharhut [Plate XXVIII. 2 of Cunningham's Stūpa of Bharhut] and Sanchi [Eastern Gate, top sculpture on the interior face of the right jamb], and later at Amarāvati, and most correctly in Gandhāra [see Plate III. of Foucher's Beginnings of Buddhist Art].

that there is here an attempt on the part of Asoka to dedicate his Edicts, as it were, to the Buddha. Along with this association of the inscriptions with the Elephant, we should also note the association of the Asokan Pillars with the four animals of the Elephant, the Bull, the Horse, and the Lion, figuring as their capitals, and chosen for the purpose as symbols of different stages in the life of the Buddha. Thus the Elephant typifies the Conception, the Bull (as presiding over) the Nativity, the Horse the Great Departure (Renunciation), and the Lion, "the lion among the Śākya" (Śākya-siṃha), the appellation by which the Buddha was known.

Asoka, however, did not inherit, but was a convert to, Buddhism. Like his predecessors, he freely allowed the slaughter of animals in the royal kitchen every day, prior to his conversion. It may be noted that he did not become an absolute vegetarian even after his conversion. His meat diet was limited to the flesh of antelopes and peacocks even in 258 B.C., some six years after his conversion, and, though the antelope was discarded later, it is not definitely known if the peacock was given up finally as an article of his food. It is interesting to note that, according to Buddhaghosa [Sāratthappakāsinī, the commentary on Samyutta Nikāya], the flesh of the peafowl was considered a delicacy in the Middle Country.<sup>1</sup> The exhaustive list of animals and birds specified for protection in the Pillar Edict V, issued as late as 243 B.C., does not include the peacock. Similarly, he indulged in all the customary merry-makings of kings before his conversion. And he has been described in all tradition as being up to usurping the throne by violence against his eldest brother, hardly a less legitimate claimant. Lastly, even as a Buddhist lay disciple, he did not desist from a bloody battle fought to the bitter end [R.E. XIII]. Thus no stories such as those anxiously invented by the Buddhist theologians are needed to prove the miraculous power of Buddhism in converting an ordinary king into the saintliest of men. The facts speak for themselves.

Tradition gives different versions of the story of Asoka's conversion. The Ceylonese legends ascribe it to the young son of his eldest brother Sumana, the boy's name being Nigrodha. Next Tissa, son of Moggali, is mentioned as his preceptor. This divine is reckoned as the fifth Vinaya teacher from the time of the Buddha, his predecessors being Upāli, Dāsaka, Sonaka, Siggava, and Chandavajji [Geiger's Mahāvamsa, p. xlvii, f.]. Tissa was sixty years old at the time of Asoka's coronation, and he died at eighty, succeeded by Mahendra. Yuan Chwang names Upagupta as Asoka's preceptor in Buddhism, but Upagupta has been identified with Moggaliputta Tissa [Waddell in JASB, 1897, pp. 76-84]. The preceptor's first educative measure was to take his royal pupil out on a long pilgrimage already described. The emperor also lived under the influence of other Buddhist saints of the times. Among these are mentioned Sumitra and Tissa whose death is said to have been followed by much confusion in the church, due to the heretics outnumbering believers. At last the confusion had to be settled by convoking the Third Council under the king's spiritual director, Tissa, as already related. The Council sat for nine months.

<sup>1</sup> I owe this reference to Mr. C. D. Chatterji.

RAMPURWA BULL CAPITAL.

It is not easy to define the degree of his devotion to his new faith. It is partly proved by his own statement in the M.R.E. I that he had intimately associated himself with the Saṅgha, and also by his dedication of his son and daughter to the direct service of the Saṅgha.<sup>1</sup> The legends go much farther to prove his devotion by relating the story that on completion of one of his religious edifices he made a gift of the empire to the monks and bought it back from them three times. This tradition is repeated by Fa-hien who refers to a great tope built by Asoka at Pāṭaliputra and to a stone pillar near it, fifteen cubits in circumference, and more than thirty in height, "on which there is an inscription, saying, 'Asoka gave the Jambudvīpa to the general body of all the monks, and then redeemed it from them with money.' This he did three times" [Legge's tr. p. 80]. But the few references in the Edicts to the Saṅgha breathe rather a spirit of authority than of submission, while his civil officers, the Dharma-Mahāmātras, were asked to control the Saṅgha as much as the pariśads of other sects. Buddhaghosa records a tradition that Asoka so far controlled the church as to personally expel schismatics, "giving them white garments." His stern attitude towards schism in the church, as expressed in his Sarnath, Sanchi, and Kosambi Edicts, of course, demonstrates his zeal for its welfare.

<sup>1</sup> The Mahāvamsa [Geiger's tr. pp. 42-43] represents Asoka (then called Dharmāsoka for his benefactions) as allowing his son and daughter to take orders instead of himself taking orders. By this measure his status in the Saṅgha was nevertheless improved. Formerly, he was only a Pachchayadāyaka, i.e., an upāsaka or a lay devotee, who supplied bhikkhus with their four necessities of food, clothing, shelter, and medicine. Now he was promoted to the rank of a Sāsanadāyaka, i.e., a kinsman of the Saṅgha, a status he had himself desired. Against this definite tradition which represents Asoka as deliberately refraining from the adoption of monkhood, it is not reasonable to infer that Asoka did become a monk from the expression—saṅgham upagate—in M.R.E. I. It may also be noted in this connection that the supposed representation of the incident of Asoka's visit to the stūpas at Rāmagrāma in one of the sculptures of Sanchi represents Asoka not in the garb of a monk, but as emperor coming in his chariot with his full retinue of elephants, horsemen, and footmen, while the same thing is repeated in two other sculptures showing Asoka with his

This brings us to the question of Asoka's toleration as permitted by his zeal for Buddhism. In the first place, he did not choose to impose his personal faith on his people, although he was so zealous in its service. In the second place, he held the scales evenly between the competing claims of different religious sects to the royal patronage, as shown by his grant of cave-dwellings to the Ājīvikas,<sup>1</sup> or two queens visiting the Deer Park and Bodh Gayā [see Marshall's Guide to Sanchi, pp. 47, 50, 51, 61].

The theory of Asoka's monkhood is suggested by a statement of It-sing [JRAS, 1908, p. 496] that he saw an image of Asoka dressed in the garb of a Buddhist monk, and by a passage in the Divyāvadāna stating that Asoka died, divested of all power, renouncing the world, and becoming a Buddhist monk [see JRAS, 1913, p. 657].

<sup>1</sup> This is generally taken as an example of Asoka's partiality towards the Ājīvikas, as compared with other sects of the times. This partiality he seems to have inherited from his parents, if we may believe in the legends. The Mahāvamsaṭīkā (p. 126), as has been already noticed, refers to the family-preceptor of his mother, Queen Dharmā, being an Ājīvika of the name of Janasāna (deviyā kulūpago Janasāno nāma eko Ājivako), whom King Bindusāra summoned to interpret the meaning of the Queen's dream before the promoting the interests of Brahmans, Ājīvikas and Nirgranthas equally with the Buddhists through the instrumentality of his officers, the Dharma-Mahāmātras, superintending their affairs at state expense. He also favoured the sect of worshippers of the previous Buddhas by doubly enlarging the stūpa of Buddha Koṇākamaṇa and paying a personal visit to the shrine. In the third place, his own Edicts breathe consistently a lofty spirit of toleration. Liberality to Brahmans and Śramaṇas is always emphasised as a public duty [R.E. III, IX] and unseemly behaviour to them equally condemned [R.E. IV, P.E. VII]. In his own "pious tours," he made it a point of "visiting ascetics and Brahmans, with liberality to them" [R.E. VIII]. He passed a special decree removing the previous distinction obtaining between sects in respect of their rights of residence [R.E. VII]. In another Edict it is stated that "the king does reverence to men of all sects, whether ascetics or householders, by gifts and various forms of reverence." While encouraging discussion among different religious schools—a time-honoured feature of Indian intellectual life—he deprecated criticism "without reason," "because the sects of other people all deserve reverence for one reason or another," and "he who does reverence to his own sect, while disparaging the sects of others, wholly from attachment to his own, with intent to enhance the splendour of his own sect, in reality by such conduct inflicts the severest injury on his own sect." Thus the king's only care was "that there should be growth in the essence of the matter in, and respect for, all sects" [R.E. XII]. In a later Edict [P.E. VI] he asserts: "I devote my attention to all communities, for the followers of all denominations are honoured by me and the honour is paid in various forms. Nevertheless, showing personal regard for them is the chief thing in my opinion."

It is, however, to be remembered that Asoka's toleration birth of Asoka; while in the Divyāvadāna (ch. xxvi) Bindusāra himself summons the Ājīvika ascetic, Piṅgalavatsa, for the examination of all his sons to find out who was the best to be his successor on the throne.

was easy enough among the different denominations of his time, which were all but offshoots of the same central faith, and did not differ among themselves so completely as the religions of Jesus, Zoroaster, or Mahomet introduced later into the country. Thus it was not difficult for the emperor, with due credit to the liberality of his views, to discover "the essence of the matter in all sects" and honour it duly. There are a few other facts which take away from his toleration to some extent. The prohibition of sacrificial slaughter of animals was another interference with a prescribed form of Brahmanical religious worship.<sup>1</sup> He openly expresses his disapprobation of certain rites and ceremonies the performance of which is an essential feature of Brahmanical religion [R.E. IX]. The sacredness of the lower animal life was disproportionately emphasised, while the sacredness of human life was not recognised by abolishing capital punishment. The only concession in this regard shown by Asoka was the three days' reprieve granted to convicts condemned to death, which might be utilised by their relations to get them a revision of the sentence [P.E. IV], as well as the institution of jail-deliveries on the anniversary days of his coronation [Ib. and P.E. V]. Perhaps the responsibility of man for his actions accounts for the hard treatment prescribed for him and leniency towards the lower forms of life.

In connection with his personal religion of Buddhism of which he was such a zealous follower, we may note that what appealed most to the essentially spiritual mind of Asoka were not its external elements, its rituals and regulations, so much as its aids to inner development or self-realisation. As a Buddhist, Asoka takes more interest in the regulations for the life spiritual than in those for the collective life of the Saṅgha, though as emperor he was keenly interested in its prosperity and preventing and punishing disunion in the Saṅgha.

<sup>1</sup> It is, however, to be noted that in interdicting the slaughter of animals at sacrifices, and in his general attitude towards rituals and ceremonies, Asoka is at one with the highest Brahmanical thought as represented in the Upaniṣads, some of the teachings of which are, indeed, echoed in his Edicts [see note under M.R.E. II]. Some of the Upaniṣads frankly stand up for the parā-vidyā, the knowledge of the Ātman, as the only and ultimate Reality, and brands as unworthy of attention all other study condemned as aparā-vidyā, in which were included even the four Vedas and the six Vedāṅgas [cf. Muṇḍaka, i, 1, 4-5; Chhāndogya, vii, 1; Bṛihadāraṇyaka, iii, 5, 1; etc.]. The Muṇḍaka [i, 2, 7] openly brands as fools those who perform mere rites and ceremonies. The Bṛihadāraṇyaka [i, 4, 10] likens those who offer sacrifices to the gods without knowing the Ātman to domestic animals ministering to the comforts of their owners!

The particular cast of his mind is, indeed, envisaged in the different canonical texts selected by Asoka for the religious instruction of his co-religionists of all classes in the Bhabru Edict. He shows a preference for the ideal of the Muni, as set forth in two of the texts cited by him, viz., the Muni-gāthā and Moneya-sute, the recluse who is free from all desire, has renounced the world, and lives to himself in solitude and meditation leading up to nirvāṇa. In the Aliya-vasāni is emphasised the need of simplicity and asceticism as regards food, dress, dwelling, and the need of meditation. The necessity for strenuous self-exertion in spiritual life is emphasised against the unforeseen hindrances to it from the Anāgata-bhayāni, such as disease, decay, famine, war, or schism. No less are the internal hindrances to it, which are to be guarded against by constant self-examination, scrutiny of every act of the body, mind, and speech, as laid down in the Lāghulovāda. Thus it is apparent from these citations of the texts that what appealed most to Asoka in Buddhism was its ideal of purity and asceticism, and the aids it prescribes for the life spiritual, rather than its external rituals and regulations or those special and sectarian elements which distinguished Buddhism from other systems.

This also leads us to infer that by the word Saṅgha as used in the Edicts, Asoka meant the entire Buddhist Order, which in all probability remained undivided up to his time, so that Asoka's Buddhism was not the particular Buddhism of any of its special sects or schools. This view, though borne out by the Edicts (e.g., the P.E. VII and Bhabru Edict, where the Saṅgha does not denote any sect of Buddhism, but the whole Order), is not in consonance with tradition according to which, by the time of the third

Buddhist Council held at Pāṭaliputra in the tenth year of Asoka's reign, there were already in the Saṅgha not only its two divisions, called Theravāda and Mahāsaṅghika, but also two subdivisions of the former and four of the latter [see Kern's Manual of Indian Buddhism]. But the tradition may be brought into conformity with what we find in the Edicts, if we suppose with some scholars<sup>1</sup> that the second Buddhist Council at Vaiśālī really came off at the time of Asoka (called Kālāsoka in tradition) when the Saṅgha was for the first time threatened with a schism, due to the Ten Points about Discipline raised by the Vṛjīian monks who were, however, defeated in the controversy, and the split in the Saṅgha was averted. This explains Asoka's fear of schism, and his measures to prevent it, and his references in the Edicts to the Saṅgha as an undivided unity which must be preserved at all costs. His intolerance towards dissent or schism was only due to his desire to nip it in the bud before it was too late : the intolerance could be commended if it had anticipated, and had not followed, the schism.<sup>2</sup>

We shall now treat of his public religion which he sought to present before his people. Negatively, we may say that it was not to be identified with any of the then prevailing faiths of the country. It was certainly not Buddhism, his own religion. " We hear from him nothing concerning the deeper ideas or fundamental tenets of that faith ; there is no mention of the Four Grand Truths, the Eightfold Path, the Chain of Causation, the supernatural quality of Buddha : the word and the idea of Nirvāṇa fail to occur ; and the innumerable points of difference which occupied the several sects are likewise ignored " [Cambridge History, p. 505]. As also pointed out by Vincent Smith : " the zeal of Asoka for Buddhism is proved not by his presentation of Dharma, but by his references to the canon, by the cast of his language, by his pilgrimages to Buddhist holy places, and by his active control of the church" [Asoka, third ed. p. 60], i.e., by what does not appear in the principal Edicts.

<sup>1</sup> E.g., Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar who forcibly advances this view in his Asoka [pp. 93-96].

<sup>2</sup> Asoka's attitude towards schism is determined by the canonical injunctions on the subject, of which an account is given in the annotation of Sarnath Edict below.

The dharma of the Edicts is not any particular dharma or religious system, but the Moral Law independent of any caste or creed, the sāra or essence of all religions [R.E. XII]. It has a two-fold aspect : (1) practical and (2) doctrinal. In its practical aspect, it prescribes a comprehensive code of conduct embracing the various relations of life. It is described as comprising :

- (1) Śuśrūṣā, obedience, to
  - (a) Father and mother [R.E. III, IV, XI, XIII, and P.E. VII] ;
  - (b) Elders [R.E. IV. ; (anupatīpati) P.E. VII] ;
  - (c) Teachers (gurus) [R.E. XIII, P.E. VII] ;
  - (d) Men of high caste or pay [agrabhūti (or bhuta) -suśrūṣā in R.E. XIII].
- (2) Apachiti, respect,
  - (a) Of pupils (antevāsī) towards their gurus [M.R.E. II] ;
  - (b) Towards gurus [R.E. IX].
- (3) Sampratīpatti, proper treatment, towards
  - (a) Ascetics, both brāhmaṇa and śramaṇa [R.E. IV, P.E. VII] ;
  - (b) Relations [M.R.E. II, R.E. IV, and XIII] ;
  - (c) Servants and dependants (dāsa-bhataka) [R.E. IX, XI, XIII, P.E. VII] ;
  - (d) The poor and miserable (kapana-valāka) [P.E. VII] ;
  - (e) Friends, acquaintances, and companions [R.E. XIII].
- (4) Dānam, liberality, towards
  - (a) Ascetics, brāhmaṇa and śramaṇa [R.E. III, VIII, IX and XI] ;
  - (b) Friends, comrades, and relatives (mita-samstutā-nātikā) [R.E. III and XI] ;
  - (c) The aged (" thairānam hiraṇṇapatividhāno," "gift of gold to the aged," in R.E. VIII).
- (5) Prāṇānām anāraṁbha, abstention from slaughter of living beings [R.E. III, IV, XI, and P.E. VII] ; prāṇanam saṁyamo, restraint of violence towards living beings [R.E. IX] ; avihāsā bhūtānaṁ, non-violence towards life [R.E. IV, P.E. VII] ; savva bhutana akṣati saṁyamam [R.E. XIII] ; prāṇesu drahyitavyaṁ [M.R.E. II].

By the inclusion of these duties, the emperor no doubt aimed at the purity of domestic life so essential to the well-being of society, of which the family is the basis and unit. The circle of domestic relations embraced even the Brāhmaṇas and Śramaṇas, thereby recognising the duty of householders to support the ascetics who left their households in the interests of their spiritual life. It also embraced the lower animals, whose claims to kind treatment by their human masters are established and even enforced [R.E. III, IV, IX, XI, XIII, and P.E. VII].

Sometimes, again, this Code of Duties, or practical Dharma, is more generally described as comprising the following virtues, viz.,

- (1) Dayā, kindness [P.E. II and VII].
- (2) Dānam, liberality [Ib. and R.E. VII].
- (3) Satyam, truthfulness [M.R.E. II, P.E. II and VII].
- (4) Śaucham, inner and outer purity [P.E. II and VII].
- (5) Mārdavam, gentleness [R.E. XIII, G. and K., and P.E. VII].
- (6) Sādhutā, saintliness [P.E. VII].
- (7) Apa-vyayatā and apa-bhāṇḍatā, moderation in spending and saving [R.E. III].
- (8) Samyama, self-control [R.E. VII].
- (9) Bhāva-śuddhi, purity of heart [Ib.].
- (10) Kṛitajñatā, gratitude [Ib.].
- (11) Dṛiḍhabhaktitā, firm devotion [Ib. and R.E. XIII, l. 5].
- (12) Dharma-rati, attachment to morality [R.E. XIII].

In R.E. XIII, the Dharma is described in a nutshell as the right attitude towards all, manifesting itself in (1) akṣati, non-injury ; (2) saṁyama, restraint ; (3) saṁācharaṇam, equal treatment ; and (4) mārdavam, mildness, in respect of all creatures, human beings, as well as beasts and birds (sarva-bhūtānām). In P.E. I, again, the following requisites are mentioned for attaining happiness in this world and the next :

(1) Dharmā-kāmatā, love of dharma; (2) Parīkṣā, self-examination; (3) Śuśrūṣā, obedience; (4) Bhaya, fear (of sin); (5) Utsāha, enthusiasm (for dharma). The practical side of dharma is also emphasised by defining it positively as consisting in an abundance of good deeds (bahu kayāne) [P.E. II], and also negatively as apāsinavam, i.e., freedom from āsinavam [Ib.], or pāpam, sin [P.E. III], the incentives to which are also pointed out, viz, chāṇḍyam, rage or fury; niṣṭhūryam, cruelty; krodhaḥ, anger; mānam, pride; and īrṣā, envy. In R.E. X, the dharma is also negatively defined as aṇarīśravam, i.e., freedom from parīśrava, or apunya, evil.<sup>1</sup>

For his own part, Asoka proved by his personal example the value he attached to his precepts. We have already seen <sup>1</sup> We may note that Jainism mentions 18 kinds of pāpa, and 42 of āśrava [Mrs. Stevenson, Heart of Jainism, pp. 302-305 f.], of which three, viz., krodha, māna, and īrṣā or dveṣa are also mentioned among the five āsinavagāminīs by Asoka [P.E. III]. The Jaina work, Praśnavyākaraṇa Sūtra, I. 7, mentions five kinds of āśrava, viz., himsā (violence), mriṣāvāda (lying), adattadravyagrahaṇam (stealing), abrahmacharya (incontinence), and parigrāha (greed). Āśrava is also defined as bhavaḥetu, the cause of existence, as contrasted with saṁvara, self-control, the cause of mokṣa or emancipation.

Buddhism also has its own list of āsavas, comprising, as shown by Childers, (1) Kāmāsava, the lust of flesh; (2) Bhavāsava, attachment to existence; (3) Avijjāsava, the sin of ignorance (of the Four Great Truths, ariyasachchāni); and (4) Diṭṭhāsava, the sin of heresy.

It is thus clear that Asoka has followed the Jain rather than the Buddhist view of the āsavas. Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar [Asoka, pp. 129-30] finds a further borrowing of Asoka from Jainism in his use in the Edicts of the terms jīva, pāṇa, bhūta, and jāta, corresponding to the pāṇā-bhūyā-jīvā-sattā of the Āchāraṅga Sūtra. In this way, Asoka, true to his own theory, has tried to include the sāra of the different religions, Brahmanism, Buddhism, and Jainism, in his own Dharma.

With the above conception of Asoka's Dharma as set forth in his Edicts, it is interesting to compare that given in the Buddhist Canonical text, Sigālovāda Suttanta [Digha N. iii. xxxi], according to which the following are to be avoided, viz., (a) The Four Vices (Kamma-Kilesā), viz.,—(1) Destruction of Life (pāṇātipāto), (2) Theft, (3) Lying (musāvādo), and (4) Adultery; (b) The Four Motives to Evil Deed—(1) Partiality (chhandā), (2) Enmity (dosā = dveṣā), (3) Fear, and (4) Folly; (c) The Six Means of Enjoyment (bhogānāni apāyamukkhāni)—viz., (1) Intoxicating liquors, (2) Frequenting streets at unusual hours, (3) Haunting fairs (samajjābhicharaṇam), (4) Gambling, (5) Evil Company, and (6) Laziness, from each of which result six Ādinavas (cf. Asoka's āsinava) or Dangers.

how much he cherished all his domestic relations, brothers and sisters, sons and grandsons, his wives and other female relations of his, in whose affairs, charities, moral welfare, and happiness, both in this world and the next, he was keenly interested. Those outside his own family, the people at large, he regarded and declared as his own children for whose welfare he was constantly working. In P.E. VI, he says : " I devote my attention alike to my relatives, to persons near, and to persons afar off, if haply I may guide some of them to happiness, and to that end I make my arrangements." Thus arose his many public works of utility already described, together with his grants to Brahmans and ascetics of different orders. In P.E. II, Asoka himself refers to his many and various kindnesses and good deeds (vividhe anugahe and bahūni kayānāni) in respect of both man and beast, birds and aquatic creatures. To man his highest gift has been dharma-dānam [R.E. XI], the gift of dharma, or chakṣu-dānam [P.E. II], the gift of spiritual insight, while to the lower brute creation it was prāṇa-dakṣiṇā [Ib.], the gift of life. Asoka also insists on dharmānuśāsanam, preaching of morality, or dharmānuśāsti [R.E. IV, XIII, and P.E. VII], as the supreme duty of a king (seste karime, R.E. IV), and, accordingly, he himself undertook a part of this public instruction in morality by moving among his people in the different provinces (jānapadasya janasya darśanam), instructing them in morality and questioning them also about morality (dharmānuśāsti and dharmapari-prichchhanam), as stated in R.E. VIII. In R.E. VI, he asserts the promotion of the good of all (sarvaloka-hita) as the most important duty of the king, which could only be duly discharged by " exertion and despatch of business " (utthānam and artha-saṁtīranam), qualities which he so pre-eminently cultivated, as will appear from the same Edict.

But the Dharma of the Edicts was not merely practical. It is distinguished by several characteristic doctrines and philosophical positions, bringing out the originality of Asoka's ideas of moral reform. The sanctity of animal life was to be recognised on principle. Toleration was insisted on as an absolute duty in a land of many faiths. The root of Toleration (tasya tu idam mūlam) is restraint of speech (vachaguti), "refraining from speaking well of one's own sect and ill of others." On that basis Toleration among the followers of different faiths will grow, and it should be further promoted by making them know of one another's doctrines, so that the follower of one sect may be able to appreciate the doctrines of other sects, and be a Bahu-śruta. Out of this width of knowledge will spring the width of outlook (bahukā), charity and toleration, and purity of doctrines (kalyāṇāgama), the essence or sāra, of all religions [R.E. XII]. The essentials of religious life are recovered from the many accidents enshrouding them, and are brought out as the several virtues already noticed. Among a people whose religion was dominated by rituals, and moral life expressed in the performance of too "many, manifold, trivial, and worthless ceremonies" connected with sickness, marriage, birth, or even journey, it was appropriate to point out the True Ceremonial as consisting only in the good and moral conduct in all relations of life [R.E. IX]. Similarly was it specially appropriate to emphasise that the gift of Dharma was the only True Gift! We may compare Cromwell's message: "Building of hospitals provided for men's bodies; to build material temples is judged a work of piety; but they that procure spiritual food, they that build up spiritual temples, they are the men truly charitable, truly pious" [R.E. XI and V. Smith's Asoka, p. 182]. In Rock Edict IV also is stated: "For this is the best of deeds—even the inculcation of the Law." Next is emphasised the need of self-exertion as a means of moral progress. The need, he frankly admits, is all the greater for a man of "high degree" [R.E. X]. He further points out: "Difficult, verily, it is to attain such freedom (from the peril of vice), whether by people of low or high degree, save by the utmost exertion (parākrama), giving up all other aims (sarvaṃ parityajya). The Minor Rock Edict I publishes the declaration: "Let small and great exert themselves (parākrameyuh)."

One method of this exertion is self-examination. This must mean examination of one's bad deeds with his good ones [P.E. III]. In P.E. I, he emphasises intense self-examination (parīkṣā) and intense effort (utsāha) as among the aids to moral life. In another Edict [P.E. VII], reflection (nijhati) is pointed out as another form of self-exertion. Here reflection on the Duty is regarded as a more powerful moral force than its regulations. Lastly, for kings and administrators, two appropriate doctrines are propounded. One is the Doctrine of True Conquest, a conquest causing pleasure, and not pain, achieved not over men's bodies, against their wishes, by physical force, but over their hearts and wills by the force of moral persuasion. The other is the Doctrine of True Glory or Fame for the king, which does not depend upon the physical extent of his dominion, but upon the moral progress he can help his people to achieve [R.E. X]. It is evident that by these and other similar doctrines, Asoka tried to instal Morality as the governing principle and force in every sphere of life, and to spiritualise politics and, indeed, all life's activities. His new ideals and doctrines express themselves in a new language, a variety of terms invented by him to indicate the new measures and institutions in which these had materialised. Among these terms, the significance of some of which has been already considered, may be mentioned here the following: (1) Dharma-mahāmātra, (2) Dharma-yātrā [R.E. VIII], (3) Dharma-lipi, as distinguished from the secular royal messages, (4) Dharma-niyama [P.E. VII], the restrictions dictated by Morality, (5) Dharma-śrāvaṇa [Ib.], (6) Dharma-ghoṣa [R.E. IV], religious proclamations as distinguished from military proclamations (bherī-ghoṣa), (7) Dharma-stambha [P.E. VII], pillars of piety as distinguished from the usual pillars of military victory and fame (vijaya or kīrti-stambha), (8) Dharma-saṁbandha, (9) Dharma-saṁstava, (10) Dharma-saṁvibhāga [R.E. XI], (11) Dharma-nugraha [R.E. IX], and (12) Dharma-dāna, (13) Dharma-maṅgala, and (14) Dharma-vijaya, referred to above. In P.E. I, he sums up his intentions by saying that he wants the maintenance, governance, happiness, and protection of the people to be regulated by Dharma, and the people to grow day by day in their dependence upon Dharma and devotion to Dharma (dharmaṁmena pālanā dharmaṁmena vidhāne dhammena sukhiyanā dhammena gotiti; dhammāpekkhā dhamma-kāmatā).

We may, lastly, note that an article of Asoka's faith was his belief in the other world (paraloka) repeated in several of his Edicts, and also in the attainment of svarga or happiness in that world as the result of the pursuit of Dharma in this world [K.E. I, P.E. I, IV, VII, and R.E. VI, IX, X, XIII. He also believed in the eternity of heaven and, consequently, in the immortality of soul [cf. "anantam punam prasavati" in R.E. XI]. In his scheme of values, he considered the other world as of supreme consequence and as the objective of life ["paratrikameva maha-phala meñati Devanam-priyo" in R.E. XIII]. In R.E. X, he plainly declares that all his endeavour (parikamate) is for the sake of the other world (savam pāratrikāya). The belief in svarga is common to both Brahmanical and Buddhist systems. The Buddha himself has said that a virtuous householder will be born as a god in the next world [Majj. N.<sup>o</sup> I. 289, 388], while the blisses of svarga or heaven are described in the Vimānavatthu as comprising the Vimāna or a movable palace always at the disposal of the denizens of heaven, a completely white celestial elephant, and a radiant body shining like fire. As a believer in the svarga, Asoka also says in his R.E. IV how he tried to stimulate his people to virtue by presenting before them pictures of such blisses awaiting them after death. In P.E. IV, Asoka also hints at his belief in the forgiveness of sins when he holds that by fasts criminals condemned to death might obtain happiness in the other world.

The dharma that is thus presented in these Edicts is but another name for the moral or virtuous life, and takes its stand upon the common ground of all religions.<sup>1</sup> It cannot be called sectarian in any sense, but is completely cosmopolitan, capable of universal application and acceptance as the sāra, essence, of all religions [R.E. XII], and is thus worthy of the sovereign of a vast empire comprising peoples in various stages of development and following different religions. Thus in the moral interests of the diverse peoples committed to his care, Asoka was at pains to think out a system which might be imposed upon all his subjects irrespective of their personal faith and beliefs. Thus he laid the basis of a universal religion, and was probably the first to do so in history. We can now easily understand how the Dharma propounded by him could be introduced equally among the wild tribes, the unsubdued borderers of his empire, among all classes and ranks of society, followers of should grow in dharma. The same Edict also points out that what Asoka did for this dharma was to define, publish, and preach it. His originality lay not in the idea of the dharma but in the practical measures for its adoption by the people. These measures he distinguishes as (1) his religious messages (dharma-śrāvaṇāni), (2) his religious injunctions (dharmaṃnuśāsanāni), and (3) his appointment of officers (the Puruṣas, the Rājukas, and the Dharma-mahāmātras) to give effect to these messages and injunctions and help the people in their religious practice (e.g., gifts).

<sup>1</sup> That the Dharma in this sense was not Asoka's original conception, but was known in earlier times, he himself hints at in two of his Edicts. In R.E. XIII, we are told that, prior to his conquest of Kalinga, and preaching of this dharma, there were people in Kalinga who conformed to this dharma. The Kalinga society was following this dharma as laid down in the Brahmanical system. The P.E. VII also indicates how Asoka's forefathers were anxious that the people

Asoka's efforts after Dharma date from his conquest of Kalinga. His mental reactions from its violence increased his cultivation of Dharma, his devotion to Dharma, and his instruction of the people in Dharma [R.E. XIII]. The reason for his moral propagandism is indicated to be that he feels bound to promote the real welfare of his subjects, as "a father does of his children" [K.R.E]. The reason is further indicated in the following statement: "And whatever efforts I am making is made that I may discharge the debt which I owe to living beings, that I may make them happy in this world and that they may attain heaven in the other world" [R.E. VI]. Thus Asoka takes to moral propagandism (dharma-vijaya) as an absolute duty of a ruler towards his subjects, one of the obligations ("debts") of kingship. Such a duty must needs be wide and catholic in its outlook and scope, such as the promotion of happiness of all sections of the people both in this world and the next.

The Edicts use the word Dharma in two senses, firstly, and usually, in its wide sense acceptable to all religions, Brahmanical or Buddhist; and, secondly, but very rarely, to indicate Buddhism, Asoka's personal religion, as in the Bhabru Edict.

different sects and denominations, males and females, householders and ascetics, among Indians and non-Indians, nay, even among the civilised peoples of Hellenistic kingdoms in the West. Therefore, to dismiss Asoka's reference to the foreign missions he sent to the Western countries as nothing but "royal rodomontade"<sup>1</sup> smacks of prejudice and a superficial view of the matter. In organising such missions to foreign countries at the expense of India, Asoka perhaps felt that India also would be benefited along with them. These were the countries with which India had active intercourse in those days, and it was desirable that they should conform to common codes and ideals of conduct and thought. The influx of foreigners to India in those days is apparent from the statement of Megasthenes that there was a separate department of administration, a sort of a Foreign Office, to deal with their special interests. The history of the Western Greek countries does not preserve any record showing how Asoka's missionaries fared there, but we need not assume on a priori grounds that those countries did not welcome the Indians who brought to them only a message of peace and goodwill and the means of medical aid for man and beast. The Indians came to serve them, and not to teach them any new religious truths: the Greeks were not called upon "to discard their gods at the bidding of the Hindus." These came to them on innocent and peaceful propaganda of social service and not on any offensive and aggressive religious propaganda. It is undeniable that Buddhist thought has left its marks upon some phases of Western thought,<sup>2</sup> notably "the heretical Gnostic sects and some of the more orthodox forms of Christian teaching" [V. A. Smith's Early History of India, 3rd ed., p. 188], and it was through the instrumentality of such foreign missions from India that these results were achieved.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> As was done by the late Dr. Rhys Davids in his Buddhist India.

<sup>2</sup> E.g., the sects of the Essenes, a small Jewish community on the shores of the Dead Sea, existing before Christianity, and of the Therapeutae, a similar order existing near Alexandria [see Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, v. 401, and xii. 318-9 quoted in Bhandarkar's Asoka, p. 165].

<sup>1</sup> It may not be amiss to recall in this connection that while Asoka used to despatch his "dūtas," the messengers of peace and goodwill, to the western Hellenistic States, these states also used to reciprocate by sending to the Mauryan Court their own envoys. The treaty with Seleukos of about 302 B.C. was followed by the despatch to the court of Asoka's grandfather of the famous envoy, Megasthenes, an officer of Arachosia, while Asoka's father, Bindusāra, received at his court the homage of the next envoy, Deimachos, from Antiochos Soter. A third envoy named Dionysios was sent to the court of Pāṭaliputra by Asoka's contemporary, Ptolemy Philadelphos of Egypt (285-247 B.C.), called Turamāyo in R.E. XIII, either in his time, or in that of his father.

CHAPTER V

MONUMENTS

WE shall now discuss the greatness of Asoka as a builder. The greatness has been somewhat exaggerated, if we are to consider only the tangible evidence proving it. Tradition, however, makes Asoka a mighty builder, the builder of cities, of innumerable stūpas, vihāras or monasteries, and pillars and rails of stone, bearing inscriptions or artistic sculptures. The Divyāvadāna [ch. xxvii] ascribes Asoka's building activity to the desire which he expressed to his preceptor, Upagupta, in the following words : " Those places which were inhabited by the Lord Buddha—those I shall visit, worship, and mark with memorials for the benefit of remote posterity." The testimony of tradition is confirmed to some extent by that of Asoka's own words in his Edicts.

Tradition ascribes to Asoka the foundation of two cities. The first is Śrīnagara, the capital of Kashmir, where Asoka is said to have built 500 Buddhist monasteries together with other edifices, some of which were consecrated to Brahmanical worship. The tradition is recorded by Kalhana in his Rājatarāṅginī [Book I, vv. 101-7], but, earlier than Kalhana, by Yuan Chwang who makes the additional statement that " Asoka gave up all Kashmir for the benefit of the Buddhist church " [Watters' tr., p. 267]. The Chinese pilgrim saw about 100 Buddhist monasteries then still existing in the country, and also saw " four Asoka topes." The second city built by Asoka was in Nepal which he is said to have visited with his daughter, Chārumatī, and her Kṣatriya husband, Devapāla, who chose to settle there, building respectively a nunnery and a monastery. In commemoration of the royal visit were built the city of Deo-Pātan (Deva-pattana), and four stūpas still standing in their archaic style [Sylvain Levi, Le Nepal, quoted in Cambridge History, p. 501].

More than the builder of cities is Asoka the builder of monasteries or stūpas, according to the legend which describes them to be as high as hill-tops ("stūpair vichitraiḥ giriśrīṅgakalpaiḥ" in the Div.). The Mahāvamsa relates that the emperor once asked his preceptor, Moggaliputra Tissa, the question, "How great is the content of the Dharma taught by the Master?" to which the divine replied: "There are 84,000 sections of the Dhamma." Then Asoka said: "Each one of them will I honour with a vihāra." Thus he proceeded to have 84,000 vihāras built by all his subordinate kings in 84,000 towns selected all over India [Ib. v. 78-80], including the Asoka monastery built by himself at Pāṭaliputra. This tradition is, however, differently told by Fa-hien. According to him, Asoka "wished to destroy the eight topes<sup>1</sup> (i.e., those built over the relics of the

<sup>1</sup> The story of Asoka's treatment of the Buddha relics has had different versions. Originally, as we read in the Mahāparinibbāna Sutta, the relics were divided among eight claimants, as already related. Besides these, Droṇa the Brahman, who made the division, received the vessel in which the body was cremated, while the Moriyas of Pipphalivana, who had arrived too late, had to content themselves only with the ashes of the funeral pyre. All these ten parties also promised each to put up a cairn or stūpa over their portion. Of these, Fa-hien saw what he calls the "Charcoal tope," the tope attributed to the Moriyas of Pipphalivana, but locates it, like Yuan Chwang, not at Pipphalivana, but near Kuśinagara. The Buddha-charita, indeed, assigns the ashes and the ashes-stūpa to the Mallas of Kuśinagara and not to these Moriyas. Fa-hien also saw Ajātaśatru's original stūpa at Rājagriha and not the one over the collective deposit of the relics mentioned below, which was seen by Yuan Chwang [Watters, ii. 158]. The third stūpa seen by Fa-hien was that at Rāmagrāma. Yuan Chwang saw the stūpa of Droṇa also at a place called Mahāsāla, near Arrah. Of all these stūpas, however, only one has been supposed to be discovered up to now, the stūpa of the Śākya at Piprahwa, containing an urn bearing the following inscription: "This shrine for relics of the Buddha, the august One, is the pious foundation (sukiti) of the Śākya, his brethren, in associa-Buddha's body distributed at his death among eight different peoples), and to build instead of them 84,000 topes " on the theory that the bones of the human body comprised 84,000 atoms [Legge's tr., p. 69]. But archaeological evidence makes us sure about only a few of the stūpas or vihāras ascribed to Asoka. From his own words in the Edicts, we only learn that he enlarged to twice its size the stūpa of Koṇāgamana, the previous Buddha, at Nigliṃva and built for the sect of Ājīvika three sets of cave-dwellings in the Barabar hills of Bihar, while archaeological inference ascribes to Asoka the great stūpa at Sanchi (forming the nucleus of the structure built round it a century later and to be seen now), as also a stūpa at Bharhut with elaborately carved railing bearing inscriptions in Asokan scripts. The latter stūpa has now disappeared, and parts of its richly sculptured railing on view at the Indian Museum in Calcutta

tion with their sisters, their children, and their wives." A reason, however, for doubting this identification of the Piprahwa stūpa, and for explaining, indeed, the non-discovery of any of the old ten stūpas, is sought to be found in a late legend that Asoka broke open seven of these and carried off the relics for distribution among his own stūpas. This story is first given in a passage in the Dīvyāvadāna, but a passage of which the historical value is weakened by the fact that it is much later than Asoka, besides being rather curt, self-contradictory, and enigmatic. This story we then find repeated by Fa-hien and, later, in the Sumaṅgalavilāsinī of Buddhaghosa, where, however, it is not Asoka but Ajātasattu who first gets the relics out of all the eight stūpas (except that at Rāmagāma guarded by the Nāgas). He is led to this step [twenty years after the Buddha's death (Bigandet, ii. 97)] by the advice of the sage Mahākassapa, who, afraid of the safety of the relics, collects them and gets them deposited in a subterranean chamber specially built for the purpose by the king. It is here that Asoka, after opening all the seven stūpas in vain, finds the relics, which he deposits in his own 84,000, not stūpas, but vihāras. Rhys Davids, who has discussed this subject [JRAS, 1901, p. 397], observes that this legend of Asoka breaking open the stūpas is not mentioned in any one of the twenty-nine canonical Buddhist writings from the time of Buddha to that of Asoka, though there is a reference to the stūpa-bhedako, the violator of stūpas, in an isolated verse in the Mahāvastu, in which one may, but should not, find a reference to Asoka [see Fleet's articles on "The Corporeal Relics of Buddha" in the JRAS, 1906, for the legends in full].

are all that now remain of that ancient structure. We may note that Yuan Chwang in the seventh century A.D. made definite mention of more than 80 stūpas<sup>1</sup> and vihāras<sup>2</sup> associated by tradition with Asoka, besides the 500 vihāras of Kashmir and other large groups of same in different localities vaguely indicated. One of the stūpas found by Yuan Chwang to the north-west of Vaiśālī, which was erected to mark the place where the Buddha in one of his previous births ruled as a Chakravartī, may be identified as the stūpa now found at Kesariya, the stūpa of the Rāja-keśarī, if it may be so taken.

<sup>1</sup> Yuan Chwang noticed the following Asokan Topes : Kapis (Kafiristan)—1 (containing the Buddha's relics) ; Nagar (Jalalabad)—2 ; Udyāna—1 (where the Buddha, as king Śivi, sliced his body to ransom a pigeon from a hawk) ; Taxila—2 (the tope where the Buddha gave his head away in charity, and the tope marking the spot where Prince Kuṇāla had his eyes torn out by the guile of his step-mother) ; Sinhapur—3 (including the one where the Buddha fed the hungry tigress by his body) ; Uras—1 ; Kashmir—4 (with the Buddha's relics) ; Sthāneśvara—1 ; Srughna—1 ; Govisana—1 (where the Buddha preached) ; Ahichchhatra—1 ; Pilosanna—1 ; Kanauj—2 (where the Buddha preached) ; Hayamukha—1 (where the Buddha preached) ; Prayāga—1 (where the Buddha defeated his opponents in controversy) ; Kosambī—3 (where the Buddha preached) ; Srāvastī—1 (with relics) ; Kapilavastu—3 (to mark places where the Buddha was born, had the first bath, and met and taught his father after his Buddhahood) ; Rāmagrāma—3 (to mark the places where the Buddha cut off his hair and stopped to turn back his groom Chandaka) ; Kuśinagara—2 (the second to mark the place of the division of the relics among the eight kings) ; Sarnath—2 ; Ghazipur—1 (with relics, and where the Buddha had also preached) ; Mahāśāla (near Arrah)—2 (the second to mark the place where were deposited the relics and jar of the Brahman Droṇa, also called the Kumbha Stūpa) ; Vaiśālī—2 ; Vajji—1 (where the Buddha preached) ; Gayā—1 (where the Buddha uttered the Ratnamegha Sūtra) ; Bodhi-Gayā—1 (to mark the place where the grass-cutter gave the Buddha grass for his seat) ; Pāṭaliputra—1 (for relics) ; Rājagṛha—2 ; near Nalanda—3 (one marking the place of Mudgalapūtra's birth and death, and the other of the Buddha's preaching) ; Tāmraliptī—1 ; Kārṇasuvarṇa—several topes to mark the places where the Buddha preached ; Orissa—more than 10 topes to mark places of Buddha's teaching ; South Kosala—1 (where the Buddha defeated the Tīrthikas in argument) ; Chola country—1 ; Dravida and Kāñchi—several topes ; Mahārāṣṭra—5 ; Valabhī—several topes ; Pofato (near Multan)—4 ; Afantu (in Sindh)—1 ; and Sindh with " some tens of topes as memorials of the Buddha's visits."

<sup>2</sup> E.g., the Asokārāma or Kukkuṭārāma at Pāṭaliputra, which was large enough to accommodate, according to the tradition recorded by Yuan-Chwang, an assembly of 1000 monks ; according to other authorities [Watters, ii. 98], 300,000 monks assembled there to attend Asoka's first " quinquennial festival of the holy priesthood."

Asoka was also a great builder of monolithic pillars, of which but few are now extant and can be definitely ascribed to him. Fa-hien noticed only six pillars, of which two were on each side of the door of the Jetavana Vihāra at Śrāvastī with a wheel and ox on their tops; one at Saṅkāśya, "about 50 cubits high, with a lion on the top of it," and niches containing shining images of the Buddha on its four sides; the fourth, an inscribed one, on the way to Vaiśālī from Kuśinagara;<sup>1</sup> the fifth, also an inscribed one, at Pāṭaliputra, already described, and the sixth in the same locality, "more than 30 ft. high with a lion on the top of it" [Ibid. p. 80].

Yuan Chwang noticed fifteen of such pillars of which four or five can now be identified with existing examples, some of which, on the other hand, escaped the notice of the two Chinese pilgrims. Yuan Chwang had noticed pillars at the following places:

(1) The Pillar at Sankassa "of a lustrous violet colour, and very hard, with a crouching lion on the top (also noticed

<sup>1</sup> At a distance of 12 yojanas from Kuśinagara towards south-east, and of 10 yojanas from Vaiśālī [Legge, pp. 71, 72]. The yojana of Fa-hien has been variously estimated at from 4½ or 5 to 7 or more miles. Considering the location of the pillar on the highway leading from Pāṭaliputra through Vaiśālī to Kapilavastu and Kuśinagara, on which stands no less than five of the Asokan Pillars, I am tempted to hazard the conjecture that this particular pillar must have been one of these Asokan Pillars, though it is not described as such by Fa-hien, and that it may be identified with what is called the Lauriya-Arāj Pillar of Asoka bearing P.E. I-VI. Fa-hien also testifies to the inscription on the Pillar, though he could not read and understand its contents himself. He relies upon the local report about them, and states that the inscription gives an account of the event of the Buddha's sending back the Lichchhavis when they insisted on following him to his pari-nirvāṇa. As noticed below, Yuan Chwang also has recorded wrong accounts of the substance of the inscriptions on Asokan Pillars he had noticed.

by Fa-hien) and quaintly carved figures on sides." <sup>1</sup> [Watters, i. 334.]

(2) and (3) The two Pillars on the two sides of the east gate of the Jetavana Vihāra at Śrāvastī, one surmounted by a sculptured wheel, and the other by an ox (as noticed by Fa-hien), and both 70 ft. high [Ib. i. 383].

(4) The Pillar near Kapilavastu, commemorative of the previous Buddha, Krakuchhanda, "with a carved lion on the top and an account of his decease on the sides," and above 30 ft. high [Ib. ii. 5].

(5) The Pillar near Kapilavastu, commemorative of the previous Buddha, Kanakamuni, "with a lion on the top, and a record of the circumstances of this Buddha's decease on the sides," and above 20 ft. high [Ib. ii. 6].

This is probably the same pillar as was discovered near Nigliṃva with an inscription which, however, does not give particulars of the decease of the Buddha, but only states that Asoka had enlarged to double its size the tope of Kanakamuni and offered it worship. The tope with bodily relics of that Buddha was also noticed by Yuan Chwang. It is thus probable that Yuan Chwang could not read the <sup>1</sup> Cunningham found at a village called Sankisa in the Farrukhābād District a pillar with a well-carved elephant on the top, without its trunk and tail [Plate VI]. He supposed this pillar to be the pillar seen by Fa-hien who, according to him, must have mistaken a lion for the elephant as its top. It is, however, strange that an accurate observer like Yuan Chwang also fell into that optical illusion by noticing "a crouching lion" instead of the elephant on the top of the same pillar. Cunningham has further supposed that the modern village of Sankisa should be identified with the ancient Saṅkāśya [ASR, i. 274]. Both the suppositions about the pillar and its place are vigorously opposed by V. A. Smith [Watters, ii. 338] who asserts: "The 'elephant-pillar' at Sankisa cannot be the 'lion-pillar' seen at Kapitha (i.e., Saṅkāśya) by Yuan Chwang. I do not believe in Cunningham's identification of the little village called Sankisa in the Farrukhābād District with Kapitha or Saṅkāśya." He places Saṅkāśya somewhere in the N.E. corner of the Etah District.

It may be further noted that Yuan Chwang may be taken as capable of distinguishing the lion from the elephant on the tops of these pillars when he mentions both 'lion-tops' and 'elephant-tops.' He mentions the 'elephant-top' of the Rājagṛha Pillar.

PLATE VI.

SAṆKAŚYA PILLAR WITH ITS ELEPHANT CAPITAL.

Asokan inscription and depended on the local people, who could not read it either, for its meaning.

(6) The Pillar in Lumbini grove (modern Rummindei in Nepal and about six miles from Dulhā in Basti District) "with the figure of a horse on the top," which Yuan Chwang saw broken in the middle and laid on the ground, being struck by lightning [Ib. ii. 14]. P. C. Mukharji, also, who first discovered the Rummindei Pillar, describes how "its upper portion is gone, and of what remains the top is split into two halves, the line of fissure coming down to near the middle height. The capital was of the usual bell-shaped form, of which the base, broken into two halves, exists." But the horse-capital has not been traced. Yuan Chwang does not refer to the inscription on the pillar, but the Fang-chih tells us that the Pillar recorded the circumstances of the Buddha's birth, which is not also quite correct.

(7) The Pillar at Kusinārā on "which were recorded the circumstances of the Buddha's decease" [Ib. ii. 28]; not yet discovered.

(8) A second pillar at Kusinārā recording the circumstances of the division of the Buddha's relics among the eight claimants [Ib. ii. 42]; not discovered.

(9) The Pillar on the way to Sarnath, "of polished green stone, clear and lustrous as a mirror in which the reflection of the Buddha was constantly visible" [Ib. ii. 48]. This pillar is identified by V. A. Smith as the pillar now known as Lāt Bhairo in Benares which was smashed during a riot in 1908.

(10) The Pillar at Sarnath, "above 70 ft. high,<sup>1</sup> which had the softness of jade and was of dazzling brightness"; it was erected "at the spot at which the Buddha, having obtained enlightenment, first preached his religion" [Ib. ii. 50]. This pillar has been discovered together with the inscription it bears, as well as the beautiful capital of four lions for which it is so deservedly famous.

(11) A pillar "surmounted by a lion" in front of the

<sup>1</sup> The height is overestimated by Yuan Chwang, unless he is referring to a different pillar. The Sarnath Pillar discovered measures only 37 feet above ground.

Asokan tope at Mahāsāla, with an inscription stating "how the Buddha here subdued and converted certain cannibal demons of the wilderness" [Ib. ii. 60].

(12) The pillar at Vaiśālī "about 50 ft. high, and surmounted by a lion" [Ib. ii. 65]. This pillar is identified by Cunningham [ASR, i. 60] with the Asokan Pillar (uninscribed) discovered near the village of Bakhra. It may be noted that the pillar is really located at the village now called Koluha (from ancient Kollāga) near the ruins of old Vaiśālī, modern Basarh. It is to be observed that this locality was famous in those ancient times as the birthplace of Vardhamāna Mahāvīra, the founder of Jainism [ASR, 1903-4, p. 88], and this might explain the location of this pillar. Thus we might rename Bakhra Pillar as Koluha Pillar.

(13) The Pillar at Pāṭaliputra "above 30 ft. high, with an inscription much injured," the gist of which, as given by Yuan Chwang, is the same as that given by Fa-hien [Ib. ii. 93]. Fragments of this pillar have been found.

(14) A second pillar at Pāṭaliputra, "some tens of feet in height," marking Asoka's "hell" or prison [Ib. ii. 88].

(15) The Pillar at Rājagṛha,<sup>1</sup> above "50 ft. high, surmounted by an elephant, and having an inscription" [Ib. ii. 162].

Up to now, the so-called Asokan pillars have been discovered at Topra, Meerut (both removed to Delhi by Sultan Firoz Tughlak in 1356 A.D.), Allahabad (probably removed by Emperor Akbar from Kauśāmbī),<sup>2</sup> Lauriya-Ararāj, Lauriya-Nandangarh (with lion-capital), Rampurwa (with bell-capital crowned by a lion), Sanchi (with four lions <sup>1</sup> Before coming to Rājagṛha, to the east of the Bodhi tree, across the Nairanjana river, Yuan Chwang had noticed two pillars, one "erected where the Buddha Kāśyapa had sat in meditation," and the other associated with a Tīrthika [Watters, ii. 141]. These pillars Yuan Chwang does not connect with Asoka.

<sup>2</sup> Recently what is believed to be an uninscribed Asokan Pillar has been discovered without its capital at Kosam (Kauśāmbī), but with the characteristic Mauryan polish [ASR, 1922-23, p. 13]. There are already found three other uninscribed Pillars taken to be Asokan, viz., those at Bakhra (Vaiśālī), Rampurwa (with bull capital) and Sankisa (with elephant capital).

BAKHIRA PILLAR WITH ITS LION CAPITAL

forming the capital), Sarnath (with capital of four lions), Rummindei (with bell-capital) and Niglivā. All these ten pillars ascribed to Asoka on the ground that they bear his inscription cannot, however, be ascribed en bloc to him. His own words forbid that inference: in the Minor Rock Edict I (Rupnath text) he orders that the Edict is to be "engraved upon stone pillars wherever there are stone pillars in my dominions"; while the last of his Edicts [P.E. VII] concludes with the sentence: "This scripture of the Law, wheresoever pillars of stone or tables of stone exist, must there be recorded so that it may be everlasting." One of the most refreshing features of Asoka's character is his scrupulous truthfulness in carefully distinguishing the achievements of his predecessors from those of his own. Thus he does not claim that all the pillars to bear his inscription were his own creation. Some of them were already found in his dominion, presumably the work of his predecessors.<sup>1</sup> These were not always utilised for his purposes by Asoka. Thus at Rampurwa one of the two pillars is uninscribed, as one was sufficient for the inscription of his edict and fulfilment of his desire. But evidence is wanting to show how and why they had been constructed before Asoka's time.

<sup>1</sup> The question of the existence of pre-Asokan Pillars has not received attention. Some light is thrown on the subject by Yuan Chwang who distinctly describes some of the pillars he had seen as being built by Asoka, but is silent about others. For instance, in the list of Pillars seen by him as given above, Nos. (1)-(6) and (13) are definitely mentioned as Asokan, while Nos. (7)-(12) and (15) are merely mentioned as standing before Asokan topes, and No. (14) on the site of Asoka's "Hell." Pre-Asokan might be supposed the two pillars Yuan Chwang had seen on his way to Rājagriha from Bodhi-Gayā, as referred to above. To the same category might perhaps belong the pillar discovered by Cunningham at Bakror near Bodhi-Gayā with two stumps in situ and part of the main shaft above 16 ft. in height. It was made of sandstone bricks of size  $15\frac{1}{2} \times 10\frac{1}{2} \times 3\frac{1}{2}$  in., the standard Asokan brick being  $16 \times 10 \times 3$  in. in size. The main shaft was removed to Gayā [ASR i. 12]. Cunningham saw two other similar and uninscribed pillars, one at Taxila and the other "with an eight-lion capital" at Latiya near Ghazipur, while he also saw "the capitals of six other large pillars still lying at Sankisa, Bhilsa, Sanchi and Udayagiri" [near Bhuvaneśvara, Orissa] [Corpus, p. 3]. In this connection one is tempted to hazard the conjecture that perhaps the Bhitari Pillar, famous for the Gupta inscription it bears, was originally a Mauryan Pillar some of whose characteristic marks it shows, viz., its reddish sandstone material, its capital, 3 ft. 2 in. high, which is bell-shaped and reeded like an Asokan capital, and its lower rectangular part or pedestal on which

Even with regard to the stūpa, the history of that type of structure does not begin with Asoka. For instance, he "enlarged to twice its size the stūpa of Buddha Koṇākamāna," as stated in the Niglīva Pillar inscription, which shows that the construction of the original stūpa was not due to Asoka.

After their location, a description may now be given of these monuments with reference to their structure and other characteristic features.

Of the stūpa, the Sanchi stūpa, as it now stands, is a segment of a sphere of which the proper height should have been  $77\frac{1}{2}$  ft., while the diameter at the base of the dome is 110 ft. The original structure of Asoka, the nucleus of the present one, had somewhat smaller dimensions, and was evidently made of bricks. The other Asokan stūpa at Bharhut, also in brick, was nearly 68 ft. in diameter.

The Mauryan structures in brick are sought to be distinguished by the size of their bricks, but the size, it must be noted, is not at all a very reliable indication of architectural chronology. There is revealed as much variety of dimension among bricks of the early strata and periods as of the obviously later ones. Bricks belonging to the Mauryan levels at Bhitā measured  $19\frac{1}{2} \times 12\frac{1}{4} \times 2\frac{1}{4}$  in. and  $17\frac{1}{2} \times 11\frac{3}{4} \times 2\frac{3}{4}$  in. The bricks at Mathurā, at the Ganeśa Mound, measured  $13\frac{1}{2} \times 10\frac{1}{4} \times 3$  in., and at Katra  $11 \times 8\frac{1}{2} \times 2\frac{1}{2}$ . The bricks found round the base of the Asokan Pillar at Sarnath were  $16\frac{3}{4} \times 11 \times 2\frac{3}{4}$  in., but at other places the dimensions ranged from  $15\frac{1}{2} \times 6\frac{1}{2} \times 2\frac{1}{2}$  to  $8 \times 6\frac{1}{2} \times 2\frac{1}{2}$ , the bricks used at the base being the largest. A much later monument, like the Bhitargaon Temple, again, showed bricks as large as the the shaft stands. Its location is no less suspicious, being on the highway between Benares and Ghazipur (Chenchu) trodden by Yuan Chwang, while there is a precedent of an Asokan Pillar being seized by another Gupta emperor for his inscription at Allahabad !

Mauryan bricks, being  $18 \times 9 \times 3$  in. Thus the size of the brick is no certain criterion for determining the chronology of the monument concerned.

Of cave-dwellings, there are found in all seven, excavated in the Barabar and Nagarjuni hills near Gayā. These are all cut out of the hard and refractory syenitic granite. Three of these bear an inscription of Daśaratha, Asoka's grandson, and belong to the Nagarjuni group. Of all the caves, the largest is known as the Gopikā Cave, with its both ends semicircular. It has a length of 40 ft. 5 in., and width of 17 ft. 2 in., with walls 6 ft. 6 in. high, and the vaulted roof of 4 ft. above them. The caves bearing Asoka's inscription are also three in number and belong to the Barabar group. The first is known as the Karna Chaupar Cave, which has a plain rectangular hall, 33 ft. 6 in. long and 14 ft. broad, with walls of the height of 6 ft. 1 in. long and the vaulted roof of 4 ft. 8 in. above them. The next is known as the Sudāmā Cave, with an outer and inner chamber. The inner chamber is circular, with a hemispherical domed roof. The outer chamber is oblong, with a length of 32 ft. 9 in., breadth of 19 ft. 6 in., walls of the height of 6 ft. 9 in., and a vaulted roof above them of 5 ft. 6 in. The third cave of this group is known as the Lomaśa Ṛṣi Cave. It does not bear any inscription of Asoka but of a later king, the Maukhari Anantavarman. The fourth cave is known as the Viśvajhopri (Viśvāmitra) Cave, and consists of two chambers somewhat unfinished. The outer chamber is more like a verandah than a chamber.

All these caves are marked by the Mauryan architectural characteristic of a bright polish shining from their walls as well as roofs, while the inscribed ones are dedicated in common to the Ājīvikas. It may be noted that Yuan Chwang mentions "some tens of cave-dwellings given by Asoka to his preceptor, Upagupta, at Pāṭaliputra, and also to other arhats" [Watters, ii. 95], but these are not yet traced.

The pillars, however, represent the high-water mark of Mauryan achievements in the domain of the fine arts. They generally consist of a round and a monolithic shaft tapering from the base with a diameter ranging from about 35½ in. to 49½ in. to a total height of between 40 and 50 ft., the diameter at the top ranging from 22 in. to about 35 in.<sup>1</sup> The capital of the columns has the shape of a bell [supposed by Havell to be lotus, "the blue lotus of the sky, Vishnu's flower" (Aryan Rule, p. 106)], and is surmounted by an abacus and crowning sculpture in the round. One of the pillars in the best condition is that at Lauriya-Nandangarh, of which the crowning figure is a lion, while the abacus is adorned by a row of Brahmani geese or hamsas pecking their food, shown in relief, symbolising the flock of which the Buddha is the shepherd. A single lion also adorns the top of the Asokan Pillars at Koluha (Bakhra), and Rampurwa. Instead of a single lion, there are four lions set back to back on the tops of the pillars at Sanchi and Sarnath. The column at Sankisa has an elephant as its capital, and that at Rampurwa a bull, while the capital of the Lauriya-Ararāj pillar had a Garuḍa according to V. A. Smith, but my local inquiry on the spot convinced me it was a single lion. It may be noted again in this connection that of the pillars seen by Fa-hien and Yuan Chwang, they noticed lion-capitals at Sankisa, at Kapilavastu on both its pillars, at Mahāśāla, at Vaiśālī (Bakhra ?), and at Pāṭaliputra; wheel-capital and ox-capital at Śrāvastī; horse-capital at Lumbini; and an elephant-capital at Rājagṛiha.<sup>2</sup> The next noticeable feature

<sup>1</sup> The Delhi-Topra Pillar is 42 ft. 7 in. in length, the Lauriya-Ararāj Pillar 36½ ft. above the ground, the Lauriya-Nandangarh 32 ft. 9½ in., with its capital 6 ft. 10 in. high, the Rampurwa 44 ft. 9½ in., the Allahabad Kosam Pillar 42 ft. 7 in., the Sarnath 37 ft. above ground, and the Rummindei about 21 ft. above ground.

<sup>2</sup> It is interesting to note that these Asokan Pillars had their imitations in later times. We find them, for instance, among the sculptures and bas-reliefs of Sanchi and Bharhut. The imitation is shown in the capitals of the pillars, such as four lions seated back to back, four elephants standing back to back and carrying riders, four dwarfs, three elephants, a wheel of sixteen spokes, one elephant between two lions, or two men in a pair-horsed chariot. Cunningham had noticed forty of such pillars at Sanchi. But the best of these was that crowned by a human figure, one of the finest specimens of sculpture, supposed by Cunningham to be the figure of Asoka himself! It was 45 ft. high, and of fine polish too. There are also some pillars showing "false capitals," with figures of goats, horses, of these pillars is the decoration of their abacus, which shows a variety, sometimes a lotus and honeysuckle, or sometimes wheels and animals, alternating. The Sarnath Pillar follows a special decorative design: besides its capital surmounted by four lions standing back to back, it shows in their middle a large stone wheel, the symbol of the dharma-chakra, of which only fragments remain. The lions again stand on a drum showing figures of four animals<sup>1</sup> carved on it, viz., a lion, an elephant, a bull, and a horse, placed between four wheels. These sculptures Sir John Marshall [ASR, 1904-5, p. 36] considers as "masterpieces in point of both style and technique—the finest carving, indeed, that India has yet produced, and unsurpassed, I venture to think, by anything of their kind in the ancient world." Over and above the variety of spirited bas-reliefs and living statues of men and animals, the pillars show a brilliant polish which reflects the greatest credit on the craftsmanship concerned. Dr. Vincent A. Smith [Asoka, p. 136] remarks: "The skill of the stone-cutter may be said to have attained perfection, and to have accomplished tasks which would, perhaps, be found beyond the powers of the twentieth century. Gigantic shafts of hard sandstone, thirty or forty feet in length, were bulls, camels, elephants, and lions. The Bharhut remains bring to light three bas-reliefs showing pillars with Persepolitan bell-capital surmounted by (1) an elephant (taken by Bloch [ASR, 1908-9, pp. 144 f.] to be a typical Asokan pillar), (2) three lions, and (3) garuḍa. See Plate X.

PLATE VIII

RAMPURWA LION CAPITAL.

<sup>1</sup> It may be noted that these four animals also constitute the tops of the Asokan Pillars as discovered up to now, or noticed by the Chinese pilgrim, Yuan Chwang. The reason for Asoka's selection of these animals might perhaps be that they are traditionally associated with the four quarters as their guardians, viz., the elephant with the east, the horse with the south, the bull with the west, and the lion with the north. These four animals on the Sarnath column are thus intended to show that the Dhamma was proclaimed to all the four quarters. As regards the lion, Asoka might also have taken it to be a symbol of the Buddha [see V. A. Smith's History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon, p. 60]. According to Foucher [Beginnings of Buddhist Art], the bull is also associated with the Buddha as incarnating the traditional date of his birth, the full moon day of Vaiśākha.

dressed and proportioned with the utmost nicety, receiving a polish which no modern mason knows how to impart to the material." The polish<sup>1</sup> has deceived some observers into thinking that it was metallic. Tom Coryate in the seventeenth century described the Delhi pillar as 'a brazen pillar,' while Bishop Heber, writing early in the nineteenth century, recorded his impression that it was "a high black pillar of cast metal" [quoted in V. Smith's Oxford History, p. 113].

It is to be noted that this polish of the pillars did not extend to the parts that were below the surface of the ground. Thus of the total length of 42 ft. 7 in. of the Delhi-Topra pillar, the polish is visible down to the length of 35 ft., while the part below that level is left quite rough. Similarly, of the lion-pillar at Rampurwa, of which the shaft alone is 44 ft. 9½ in. long, fully 8 ft. 9 in. are left undressed and unpolished. Again, of the Lauriya-Nandangarh pillar, which is 39 ft. 7½ in. above the ground, a length of 10 ft. is below the ground. When its foundations were dug up, a ring-like projection, 2 in. thick, was seen round the shaft at a depth of 2 ft. below the ground. Up to this projection the pillar is polished, but below it, the stone was rough, bearing marks of the chisel. A little farther down was discovered the figure of a peacock, 4 inches in length, which is no doubt, symbolical of the Mayūra ensign of the so-called imperial house of the Moriyas or Mauryas. Ten feet below the ground, the shaft was joined on to a square stone basement extending to a length of about 2 ft. on its four sides [see Cunningham, ASR, xxii. 46, 47]. A square pedestal was also found as the basement of the Koluha Pillar [Ib. i. 60].

In connection with the location of these Asokan pillars, the late Dr. V. A. Smith raised an engineering enigma which defies solution unless we are prepared to concede very much more to ancient Indian engineering than is usually done. The average weight of these pillars of the height up to 50 ft., and circumference up to 50 in., is estimated by Cunningham to be about 50 tons. The handling of such enormous monoliths for purposes of their appointed location was a problem in transport. Their locations were, moreover, determined on a deliberate design. Four of them mark stages on the royal road frequented by pilgrims from Pāṭali-putra to the Buddhist holy places along the foot of the Himalayas in the Nepalese tarai, while the others are planted at important centres of population, whether cities or sacred places, like Sanchi, Sarnath, or Kauśāmbī, to enable the proclamations inscribed on them to be widely read. Then we must consider the location of the central workshop which turned out these pillars of a uniform, standardised, pattern, polish, and finish. The material of the pillars points to the Chunar hills out of which it was quarried. Thus they were "erected at localities hundreds of miles distant from any quarry capable of supplying the exceptionally choice blocks required for such huge monoliths. Their fabrication, conveyance, and erection bear eloquent testimony to the skill and resource of the stone-cutters and engineers of the Maurya age" [V. A. Smith's Asoka, p. 121]. Fortunately, we can realise the difficulties which Asoka's engineers had to face and overcome in transporting the pillars to their prescribed positions, from a description of an attempt at removal made about sixteen centuries later under the orders of the then Indian king, Sultan Firoz Shah Tughlak. The nearest place where an Asokan pillar was to be found being Topra, the Sultan wanted it to be removed as a trophy to Delhi. The arrangement for the removal involved the construction of a special carriage with 42 wheels, to each of which was fastened a rope. At each of these ropes pulled 200 men, so that the carriage with the weight of the pillar on it had to be drawn by as many as 8400 men. "When labour so great was required to move one a distance of 120 miles we may imagine how much energy was expended in setting up thirty pillars, some of which were much heavier than that removed by Firoz Shah, and were transported to distances still greater" [Ibid. p. 123].

<sup>1</sup> My photograph of the Lauriya-Ararāj Pillar shows the polish in the form of a whitish line along a part of its shaft.

PLATE IX.

LAURIYA NANDANGARH PILLAR.

The success of Mauryan engineering was also manifest in the domain of irrigation. The inscription of Rudradāman

(A.D. 150) relates how the beautiful Sudarśana lake<sup>1</sup> was constructed on the mountains Raivataka and Ūrjayat (near Girnar or Junagadh) by artificially damming up the course of their streams, Palāsinī, and others. It is also stated further in the inscription that the reservoir was "ordered to be made by the Vaiśya Puṣyagupta, the provincial governor (Rāṣṭrīya) of the Maurya king, Chandragupta, and adorned with conduits (pranālī) for Asoka the Maurya by the Yavana king, Tuṣāspa, while governing (adhiṣṭhāya).” Thus the lake was equipped “with well-provided conduits, drains and means to guard against foul matters.” We are in this connection reminded of the remark of Megasthenes that there were officers in Mauryan administration whose duty was “to measure the land and inspect the sluices by which water is distributed into the branch canals, so that every one may enjoy his fair share of the benefit.”

Lastly, the Mauryan engineers were good at town-planning, too. Pāṭaliputra, the capital of the Magadhan empire since the days of Udaya, the grandson of Ajātaśatru (as stated in the Vāyu Purāṇa), who first laid its foundation at which the Buddha made a prophecy of its future greatness, had become developed by the time of Chandragupta Maurya into a mighty city fulfilling that prophecy. As seen and described by Megasthenes, “it stretched in the inhabited quarters to an extreme length on each side of 80 stadia (=about 9 miles), with breadth of 15 stadia (=1½ miles), in the shape of a parallelogram, encompassed all around by a ditch for defence and receiving the sewage of the city, which was 600 ft. in breadth and 30 cubits in depth.”<sup>1</sup> Its inner line of defence was formed by a massive timber palisade, “pierced with loopholes for the discharge of arrows, crowned with 570 towers, and provided with 64 gates.” Megasthenes further notes that of the cities of India, of which “the number is so great that it cannot be stated with precision,” those on the banks of rivers or on the sea-coast are built of wood instead of brick to escape from floods, while those “on commanding situations and lofty eminences are built of brick and mud.” This wooden city was dominated by the royal palace which excelled in splendour the palaces of Susa and Ekbatana, with its gilded pillars adorned with golden vines and silver birds, and its extensive grounds studded with fish-ponds, and beautified by many ornamental trees and shrubs. Thus with his empire, Asoka inherited all that won it, and made it great—a large army, an efficient administrative organisation, and, last, but not least, its wealth of artistic and architectural achievements and traditions. Thus some of the polished pillars are rightly ascribed by Asoka to his predecessors who could build a great city, and the most gorgeous palace of the East.

<sup>1</sup> The history of the lake is carried down to the time of Skandagupta in one of his inscriptions [No. 14 of Fleet's Gupta Inscriptions] dated A.D. 458. It was situated in the western province of his empire, the land of the Surāṣṭras, under his governor Paṇḍadatta, who appointed his son, Chakrapālita, in charge of a city called in the earlier Rudradāman inscription, Girinagara or Gīrnār. The lake suddenly burst, owing to “much water raining down unceasingly for a long time,” with the result that the rivers, which “dwelt so long in captivity” within the bounds of the lake, “went again to their lord, the sea.” Of these rivers, only one is named, viz., Palāsinī. The reservoir (taṭākam) was, however, promptly restored by Chakrapālita at an “immeasurable expenditure of wealth” on “masonry work.”

Asoka also made important contributions to the expansion of the city and palace, the magnitude of which made Fa-hien attribute them to supernatural agency. Seriously and sincerely does Fa-hien observe: “The royal palace and halls in the midst of the city, which exist now (i.e., about 650 years later) as of old, were all made by spirits which he employed, and which piled up the stones, reared the walls and gates, and executed the elegant carving and inlaid sculpture-work,—in a way which no human hand of this world could accomplish” [Legge’s trans. p. 77]. This passage hints that Asoka replaced much of the old wooden material of the palace by stone which was so successfully utilised in other monuments of Asoka in the different parts of his empire.

<sup>1</sup> It is interesting to note that the river Ganges from the sea up to Pātaliputra was navigable in those days. Strabo [xv. i. 11] speaks of “the ascent of vessels from the sea by the Ganges to Palibothra,” while in an earlier legend [Vinaya, iii. 338 (Samantapāsādikā)], Mahendra, the younger brother of Asoka, is represented as travelling by ship from Pātaliputra to Tāmalitti and thence to Ceylon. A Jātaka story [Jāt. iv. 159] even describes a company of carpenters as sailing from Benares, so far up the Ganges, right up to an island in the ocean !

Archaeological exploration has been able partially to unearth a few remnants of the Mauryan palace. The work was begun by P. C. Mukharji who dug up several fragments of polished stone that could not be mistaken as parts of an Asokan column.<sup>1</sup> It was resumed many years later by Dr. D. B. Spooner whose excavations have brought to light polished Chunar sandstone pillars (each about 20 ft. high with a diameter at the base of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  in.) in parallel rows, 15 ft. apart, indicative of a hall of 100 pillars in the Mauryan palace showing a similarity of design<sup>2</sup> to the Achaemenian palaces of Persia. There was also discovered, 17 ft. below the surface, a wooden floor, on which there is a deposit of eight or ten feet of soil, followed by a layer of ashes in which lie the broken fragments of the columns. At the site of each column there is a tubular shaft of ashes descending through the soil to the level of the floor. Dr. Spooner's assumption is that the deposit of silt is indicative of a flood, and that of ashes a fire, and, between the flood and the fire, the work of the destruction of the palace was complete.<sup>1</sup> There have been also unearthed, lying parallel to one another, seven wooden platforms to the south of the assumed pillared hall, each of which is 30 ft. long, 6 ft. wide and 4½ ft. high. Dr. Spooner comments on "the absolute perfection" of the carpentry displayed in the making of these platforms.

<sup>1</sup> An Asokan Pillar at Pāṭaliputra was seen, it may be remembered, by both Fa-hien and Yuan Chwang.

<sup>2</sup> On this subject, which has excited much controversy, the following remarks of Havell, an authority on Indian Art and Artistic History, may be considered [Aryan Rule, p. 75]: "Excavations recently made on the site of Pāṭaliputra have revealed what are supposed to be the foundations of the palace, and an arrangement of pillars similar to that of the Apadana at Persepolis, whence it has been somewhat hastily assumed that Chandragupta sent for foreign builders to build him a palace on the Persian model, just as in modern times Anglo-Indian builders copy the plans of European buildings. Doubtless the fame of Chandragupta would have attracted craftsmen of all kinds from far and near, especially master-builders of repute, who were always accustomed to seek employment wherever it might be found when royal capitals were in the making. But Indian History did not begin with Chandragupta, and the Indo-Aryan building tradition was an ancient one when Pāṭaliputra was founded. The inference to be drawn from the fact that an Indo-Aryan imperial palace resembled an Iranian one in its general scheme is merely that Aryan culture in India and Iran inherited the same traditions, not that Chandragupta was of set purpose imitating the palace of Darius. So great a champion of the Indo-Aryan cause and the founder of the greatest Indo-Aryan dynasty known in history would hardly be likely to celebrate the freedom of Āryāvarta from the Macedonian yoke by imposing on it the intellectual dominion of Persia. The Kauṭīliya-arthaśāstra shows that Chandragupta's statesmanship was wholly inspired by Indo-Aryan traditions."

Besides examples of architectural achievements, we may also consider some of the minor arts of the period. At Parkham near Mathurā was found a colossal statue of a man, 7 ft. high, in grey and highly polished sandstone, and bearing an inscription in Asokan script. A complementary female statue was also found at Besnagar, and quite lately two statues were discovered at Patna and Didarganj. These statues in their uniface images betray the primitiveness of the art. Dr. A. K. Coomaraswamy [History of Indian and Indonesian Art, p. 16] considers these as examples of the "folk art" of the times, as distinguished from the court or official art. Similarly, the art of coining was not very advanced, considering the crude punch-marked coins of the period with their unsymmetrical forms and symbols stamped indiscriminately upon their surface. Likewise some of the contemporary terra-cottas discovered show only "coarse primitive reliefs." "Indeed, so far as is known at present, it was only in the jewellers' and lapidaries' arts that the Maurya craftsman attained any real proficiency, and in this domain his aptitude lay, not in the plastic treatment of form, but in the high technical skill with which he cut and polished refractory stones or applied delicate filigree and granular designs to metal objects. The refined quality of his gold and silver work is well illustrated in two pieces of jewellery which were discovered on the site of Taxila in company with a gold coin of Diodotus, a large number of local punch-marked coins, and a quantity of other jewellery and precious stones. Of the stone-cutter's art, also, some beautiful examples are furnished by the relic caskets of beryl and rock crystal from the stūpas of Bhattiprolu and Piprahwa, the latter of which is probably to be assigned to this epoch" [Cambridge History, p. 623]. We may add to these examples the very inscriptions of Asoka which are executed with perfect accuracy in very well-cut letters.

<sup>1</sup> It is interesting to note that the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta [i. 28] puts into the mouth of the Buddha the following prophecy about the destruction of Pāṭaliputra from the same natural calamities: "But three dangers will hang over Pāṭaliputra, that of fire, that of water, and that of dissension among friends."

From the archaeological we may now proceed to consider the artistic aspect of these monuments of Asoka. That in their best examples they exhibit a high level of technical and artistic accomplishment is admitted on all hands. But there is a doubt as to how far this art is Indian in its origin and character, and especially in some of its finished forms which we see among the Asokan monuments. As its excellence is seen mainly in the treatment of animals, of their muscles, veins, and claws, and also of plants, and birds, the art has been taken as naturalistic, and, to that extent, as foreign to Indian artistic traditions and ideals. It is taken to be inspired by Greek Art which alone in that epoch of world's history distinguished itself in the modelling of living forms. A negative evidence for the foreign inspiration in Asokan Art is sought to be found in the fact that its best examples belong to the same epoch which witnessed crude and primitive examples already mentioned, such as the statues in the round found at Mathura, Besnagar, and Patna, of which the indigenous origin cannot be disputed, so that we are forced to account for the evolution of an art that could produce at the same time such an extreme difference in the quality of its examples. Thus the best examples, the Asokan Pillars, are traced to foreign influence. While some of their elements are traced to Greece, others are traced to Persia. Their so-called bell-shaped capitals, their smooth unfluted shafts, their polish, and even their inscriptions are traced to Persia.

This, however, does not seem, on a closer examination, to be a completely correct view of the subject. Even V. A. Smith was not prepared to go so far in ascribing foreign origins to Asokan art. He considers, for instance, the treatment of the bull and the elephant in the Sarnath abacus as being entirely Indian in both subject and inspiration, and not as in any way the outcome of a half-caste art. According to Havell, the supposed Persepolitan bell-capital is a misreading of the Indian lotus. Further, Codrington points out that the Persian capital is not quite closely related to these early Indian bell-capitals, and does not show itself to be a necessary part of the structure of the Asokan pillar. "The Persian bell is conceived as part of a compound capital, and is always crowned by a further member, the lines of which curve upwards and outwards, the whole suggesting the flourishing head of a palm tree with a ring of drooping half-dead leaves clustering below round the stem. Above this comes a quadruple bracket-like member with upper and lower incurving volutes, between which and the final member is nothing but a bead-and-reel fillet. Above this, the head and bent-back fore-legs of the surmounting beast jut out, without any sort of abacus or intermediary platform. The typical Achaemenid pillar-shaft was also fluted, not smooth, whatever its rudimentary form may have been" [Ancient India, pp. 18, 19]. As regards the pillars themselves, it is to be noted that while those at Persepolis and elsewhere are structural, the Asokan ones are purely monumental. Nor is the idea of raising the pillars completely foreign to India. The raising of religious symbols for common reverence is a time-honoured Indian practice. Hindu temples have always before them their banner-torch or light-pillar, which are often adorned with the special symbol of the god, a wheel, or a trident. Vedic literature, itself, by its descriptions of the banner of Indra, and of sacrificial posts, points to far-distant origins of these pillars. The Asokan pillar is the descendant of those royal or tribal ensigns or standards which were set up to mark off the sacrificial areas for ancient Vedic ceremonies. The Indian purpose of these pillars is, again, declared in their very locations. Rummindei and Sarnath called for pillars commemorative respectively of the Buddha's Nativity and first teaching. The pillar at Nigilva associates itself with the fifth of the previous Buddhas. A group of pillars guides the pilgrim's progress towards the Buddhist holy places.

It is not, however, to be claimed that Asokan art does not reveal any trace of foreign influence. It is only difficult to trace it to a particular source or country in that age of frequent and fruitful intercourse between India and the outside world. The influx of foreigners to India for purposes of trade and business called for the institution of a Foreign Office in the chief cities of India under Asoka's grandfather, Chandragupta Maurya, as stated by Megasthenes, the Greek ambassador to his court. And we have already seen from Asoka's own words in his edicts how largely and religiously did he seek to cherish and cultivate these foreign relations with the then most prominent Western countries and seats of Hellenic culture and civilisation. The fact of the matter was that in that age of intercourse and interchange of ideals, the arts of different countries were bound to reveal some common elements and features which in the case of India and Persia might be traced to a common source from which the entire culture of the East or Asia has sprung.

CHAPTER VI

SOCIAL CONDITIONS

WE may now present an account of the social conditions of the country, so far as they can be gathered from the evidence available.

Society is described as comprising religious and secular classes. The former are distinguished as "Brāhmaṇas, Śramaṇas and other Pāṣaṇdas," i.e., followers of different dissenting sects. Among these dissenters, the most prominent in Asoka's time were the Nirgranthas (Jains), and the Ājīvikas, who have been singled out as receiving the special favour of the emperor by his grant of rock-cut dwellings to them.

The religious life of the country was represented by a multiplicity of sects, of which the Edicts mention by name only the four aforesaid as being evidently the more influential ones, viz., the Brāhmaṇas, the Buddhists, the Ājīvikas, and the Nirgranthas. The interests of all these religions were promoted equally and impartially by the State through a special department created for the purpose under the enlightened religious policy of the emperor. That policy, it should be observed, was not one of religious neutrality, which is a policy of apathy and inaction, but a policy of active support of the "essence" and good to be found, in the opinion of the emperor, in all the religious denominations of the country.

Intellectual life centred chiefly in the monasteries and other institutions associated with the different denominations, and was very much quickened by the debates and discussions among these denominations which were really so many different schools of philosophy. Learning and culture at the higher levels of society seem also to have filtered down to the masses so as to produce a comparatively large percentage of literacy among them. This we can infer, as Dr. Vincent A. Smith was the first to point out [Asoka, p. 139], from the fact that the Edicts were composed in the vernacular dialects, and inscribed in the two principal scripts of the country on stone in places where they were accessible to the masses, only on the assumption that they would be able to read them<sup>1</sup> and lay to heart the meaning of the message which their beloved sovereign addressed to them for their own true well-being. Any other assumption would only represent Asoka as having embarked upon this costly and arduous adventure simply to satisfy his own whim or vanity. The popular literacy was the product of the numerous educational institutions and monasteries connected with the various denominations of the country. The efficiency of the monasteries as agencies of popular education may be inferred from the results achieved even in modern times, not the days of their glory, by the monasteries of Burma where the number of persons per 1000 able to read and write is 378 for males and 45 for females, as against 37 and 2 in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, with so many cities and historic capitals, according to the Census figures of 1901. Thus Vincent Smith comes to the conclusion: "I think it likely that the percentage of literacy among the Buddhist (?) population in Asoka's time was higher than it is now in many provinces of British India " [Ibid.].

<sup>1</sup> In considering, however, this apparently very reasonable inference advanced by Dr. V. A. Smith and other writers, we must note that it leads us to the position that there was some sort of lingua franca developed in Asokan India. For Asoka's inscriptions reveal a common language underlying its many local peculiarities and provincialisms in respect of the forms of words, grammar, and vocabulary, and this common language is assumed to have been understood by the north as well as the south Indians in the third century B.C., though South India so early became the fruitful mother of so many vigorous languages different from one another, and radically different from the languages of the north! The whole question should be considered from the standpoint of the history of the Indian languages and literature.

The religious classes of society are distinguished from the secular classes designated as grihasthas or householders in the Edicts. Among the different castes or classes then existing in society, we have mention of the Brāhmaṇas and Ibhyas or Vaiśyas [R.E. V], soldiers and their leaders, corresponding to Kṣātriyas (bhaṭamaya, ib.), and servants and hirelings (dāsa-bhaṭaka in R.E. IX, XI, XIII, and P.E. VII), corresponding to the Śūdras. All these different castes and classes marked society in all the provinces of Asoka's empire, except the janapada or province of the Yonas who did not know of these nikāyas and pāṣaṇḍas, and were strangers even to Brāhmaṇas and Śramaṇas [R.E. XIII]. Thus the Yona province of the empire was not at all Hinduised in cult or custom.

An elevated and extended conception of the home or family life appears in the Edicts. Moral life is to be built primarily upon a proper system of domestic relations to be marked by a wide range of interests and sympathies, embracing not merely the relationships in blood, but also those due to pupilage, or even physical service, nay, even the service derived from the domesticated animals whose claims to kind treatment are recognised.

The popular religious life of the times seems to have been dominated by too many and trivial ceremonies, as stated in R.E. IX. There was also the universal belief in pāpa [R.E. V and P.E. III] and punya [R.E. IX and X], in paraloka, and svarga, i.e., in what may be called the doctrine of Karma. The popular Buddhism of the times seems also to have admitted of the worship of the previous Buddhas, as is apparent from Asoka's visit and repairs to the stūpa of Koṇākamana.

It was also the recognised duty of the householders to honour and support those who left their houses and chattels in their quest of Truth. Asoka's repeated insistence on respect for the ascetics points to their numerical strength in the country. The growth of asceticism is a compliment to the moral progress of a country which could produce a plentiful crop of men capable of renouncing the world and of utmost self-denial in the interests of the life spiritual.

Some of the ascetics could be induced to include social service as a religious duty. Out of these were recruited Asoka's missionaries who dedicated themselves to the service of their faith in distant and foreign lands.

Some facts about the social life of the upper classes and royalty may be gathered from the legends. Polygamy and early marriage seem to have been in vogue. Asoka had several wives. He first married at 18. He married his eldest daughter when she was 14. But it is remarkable how the Buddhist Church in those days provided a career for the aristocratic youths choosing to dedicate themselves to its service. Prince Mahendra and Princess Saṅghamitrā both renounced the world and entered the Saṅgha as its members. That is why Asoka shows a distinct predilection for ascetics in his Edicts.

The popular religious outlook was distinctly wide and catholic. Hindu missionaries working in "the country of the Yona" [Mahāv. XII. 6],—in the five Hellenistic countries of Syria, Egypt, Cyrene, Macedonia, and Epirus,—successfully solved the social problem of sea-voyage and foreign travel. Caste could not pit itself against religion. A further typical example of the same broadening religious outlook is furnished in the conversion of a Greek into a Hindu with his original name changed into Dharmarakṣita, and then by his selection as an evangeliser of the Aparāntaka country. After this, we need not be surprised at the gift of a monolithic column in honour of Lord Vāsudeva by a Hindu Greek named Heliodorus calling himself a Bhāgavata, in about 140 B.C. It was this kind of spirituality that, surmounting geographical boundaries and barriers, carried India's message and thought to other lands and laid the foundation of a Greater India across the northern mountains and the southern seas.

Though one of the greatest kings of history, Asoka has not received from posterity the tribute due to his memory. if we, of course, leave out of account the Buddhist literature of legends, Ceylonese and Indian, that have naturally gathered round one to whom Buddhism owes so much. An attempt was even made by some later Brahmin grammarians to bring into disrepute the very title by which he is known. They have explained his appellation Devānāmpriya as the standing epithet of a fool! But the Buddhist references are, of course, duly respectful. The Milinda Pañha [iv. 1, 47] refers reverentially to Asoka as "dhammarāja," the righteous king, holding his court at Pāṭaliputra, and moving out to see the river Ganges on which his city stands, with his retinue of urban and rural people (negama-jānapada), his officers (amachcha), his soldiers (bhaṭṭa-bala), and his ministers (mahāmātras). Other tributes to his memory are on stone. The Junagadh inscription of Rudradāman (about A.D. 150) contains the expression Asokasya Mauryasya [Ep. Ind. viii. 43], while in a much later inscription at Sarnath of Kumāradevī [queen of King Govindachandra of Kanauj (A.D. 1114-1154), Ep. Ind. ix. 321], we have the expression, "Dharmāśoka-narādhipasya," i.e., "of righteous Asoka, the ruler of men." A yet later inscription of Dhammacheti [IA, xxii.] also mentions Dharmāsoka. Lastly, there is a Burmese inscription at Bodh-Gaya of the date A.D. 1295-1298, which refers to "Śrī Dharmāsoka, the ruler of Jambudvīpa, who built 84,000 chaityas" [Ep. Ind. xi. 119]. Thus Indian historical judgment has rightly designated Asoka as Asoka the Righteous.

But the memory of Asoka has perhaps received a more fitting recognition and reverence in sculpture. According to Foucher, the Asokan Cycle has inspired even early Buddhist Art. He finds some of the texts of the Divyāvadāna bearing on the life of Asoka illustrated on stone at Sanchi. On the front face of the lower lintel of the eastern gate of the Sanchi stūpa, there may be traced a representation of the visit of Asoka to the Bodhi tree, the details of which seem to be borrowed from the description of the event in the Divyāvadāna (pp. 397-398). It tells of Asoka coming with his jealous queen, Tīṣyarakṣitā, in a procession to the Bodhi tree, which was withering under a spell cast by her upon it, to have it revived by "watering it with pitchers of scented water." Accordingly, we find to the left of the sculpture a crowd of musicians and devotees with water vessels ; in the centre, the temple and Tree of Knowledge (Sambodhi) ; and to the right, a royal retinue, a king and queen descending from an elephant, and the same offering later their worship at the Tree. The association of this sculpture with Asoka is further indicated by the figure of pairs of peacocks at the ends of the architrave, the peacock (mayūra or Pali mora) being the dynastic symbol of the Mauryas. This scene is repeated on the top and second panels of the rear face of the left pillar of the south gate also. Then the story of the Divyāvadāna of Asoka's visit to the stūpa at Rāmagrāma is also represented, with its details, on stone, both at the south and the east gates. At the south gate, it occurs on the front face of the middle architrave, showing to the right Asoka approaching in his chariot with his royal retinue of elephants, horsemen, and footmen, and to the left, the worshipping Nāgas and Nāgīs, the guardians of the stūpa [Div. p. 380]. It may be noted that about a century earlier, at a few paces from this sculpture, Asoka himself had erected his pillar to bear the inscription of his Edict. At the east gate, back lower lintel, the Nāgas are represented as elephants bringing flowers and fruit as offerings. Lastly, the Divyāvadāna story of Asoka's visit to the Deer Park as the scene of the Buddha's first teaching is also represented at Sanchi. Sir John Marshall discovers it on the south gate, front face of its left pillar, of which the top panel shows Asoka with his two queens visiting the Mrigadūva indicated by the symbols of the deer and the wheel, and the second panel showing Asoka in his chariot with his retinue around [Guide to Sanchi, p. 50]. Thus these sculptures constitute some of the best memorials which posterity has raised to the pious memory of Asoka.

CHAPTER VII

TRANSLATION AND ANNOTATION OF THE EDICTS <sup>1</sup>

A. MINOR ROCK EDICTS

I

[BRAHMAGIRI]

UNDER the instructions of the Prince (āryaputra) and Ministers (mahāmātras) <sup>2</sup> from Suvarṇagiri,<sup>3</sup> the Ministers of

<sup>1</sup> The Edicts here are arranged in the chronological order, so far as it may be inferred from, or is indicated by, them.

<sup>2</sup> Literally "great in measure," and hence a man of high rank, high official, prime minister. In the Edicts, the Mahāmātras are found in independent charge of cities, e.g., Isila, Samāpā [K.R.E. II], or Kosambi [M.P.E.], or associated with the Viceregal Princes as at Tosali [K.R.E. II] or at Suvarṇagiri, as here; are placed in charge of over thousands of lives [K.R.E. II]; are sent out on quinquennial inspection of judicial administration, as on other duties (Ib.); are heads of Departments as Dharma-Mahāmātras, Strī-adhyakṣa-Mahāmātras, or as directors of different religious sects [R.E. V, P.E. VII, M.P.E.]; and are also members of the Mantri-Parīṣad or councillors to whom the king confides urgent matters [R.E. VI]. In the Kauṭīliya, the Mahāmātra figures as a minister [I. 10, 12, 13], and as the chief executive officer of a city under the title "Nāgarika-mahāmātra" [IV. 5], while his power and influence will be evident from the fact that the seditious mahāmātra is a cause of much concern to the king, who even sends him out of the way [V. 1]! The Vinaya Pitaka, as Dr. Thomas shows [JRAS, 1914, p. 389], knows of more varieties of Mahāmātras, the Vohārika Mahāmatta (for Law), Gaṇaka Mahāmatta (Finance), Senānāyakam (Army), Upachārakam (Court), and Sabbatthakam (Prime Minister).

<sup>3</sup> From its name, the "gold mount," the place might be in the ancient gold-mining areas, and this edict has been found at Maski

Isila <sup>1</sup> are to be wished good health and then addressed as follows : <sup>2</sup>

Thus ordains His Sacred Majesty : <sup>3</sup> For more than two near Raichur, which shows numerous traces of ancient gold workings, a shaft of which is the deepest in the world known so far [Hyderabad Arch. Series, No. I.]. Hultzsch identifies it with Kanakagiri, south of Maski.

<sup>1</sup> The name Isila, strangely enough, appears in a Sanchi inscription [No. 4, p. 111, of Ep. Ind. ii.]. Isila may be taken to be the modern Siddapura Village in the Chitaldroog District of the Mysore Province.

<sup>2</sup> This paragraph appears only in the three Mysore versions of the Edicts.

<sup>3</sup> The Maski Edict uses the king's personal name, Asoka, and has settled a long controversy on the subject.

The formula, "Thus saith the king Piyadasi," is absolutely singular in Indian Epigraphy, without any precedent or imitation. It was, however, in use among the Achaemenian Kings of Persia. The inscriptions of Darius begin with the formula, "thātiy (Sans. samsati) Dārayvaushī (= Dhārayavasuh) kshāyathiya (= kṣetā)," "thus saith the King Darius." Thus the formula became known in India through the political connection of Darius with a part of the Panjab. It is also significant that the Persian word for inscription is the same as the Asokan word dipi, lipi [see Senart, Inscriptions of Piyadasi, ii. 100]. It is, however, to be noted that the formula, "evam āha," "thus saith," may be also taken to be of indigenous origin, considering that it is mentioned as one of the set phrases prescribed for what is called a prajñāpāna-śāsana (writ of information) by Kauṭilya. Another variety of rāja-śāsana (royal writ) is called by Kauṭilya ājñā-lekha (writ of command), of which we have also examples in this Edict, as well as in R.E. III and IV, where Asoka addresses his ājñā or decree to his various officers and to his pariṣad or council respectively.

For the expression Devānām-priya Priyadarśi, V. A. Smith's translation, "His Sacred and Gracious Majesty," seems to me to be the most appropriate, and is accordingly adopted here. The form Devānām-priya instead of Deva-priya would be an epithet of contempt under a rule of Pāṇini [vi. 3, 21], but is mentioned among the exceptions to the rule by Kātyāyana (about 350 B.C. according to Sir R. G. Bhandarkar), supported by Patañjali (150 B.C.) and even the Kāśikā (A.D. 650). The exception is not, however, allowed by the later grammarian, Bhattojidīkṣita, who insists on taking Devānām-priya as a term of contempt, implying a fool (mūrkhā) devoid of the knowledge of Brahma, and hence addicted only to sacrifices and offerings by which they please gods, as cows please men by offering milk (vide Tattvabodhini and Bālamānoramā). Thus a title which was complimentary during the Nandas, Mauryas, and Śuṅgas, suffers years and a half that I had been a lay-disciple (upāsaka),<sup>1</sup> I had not exerted myself well.<sup>2</sup>

But a year—indeed, for more than a year that I visited the Sāṅgha,<sup>3</sup> I exerted myself greatly.

a deterioration in sense under later Brahminical prejudice against the most distinguished Buddhist monarch !

The rule of Pāṇini referred to above is “Ṣaṣṭhyā ākrośe,” i.e., the genitive affix is to be retained for compounds denoting affront or insult, e.g., Chaurasya Kulam, but Brāhmaṇa-kulam, where no contempt is meant, and, similarly, Devānām-priya, as instanced in the Vārttika. Patañjali, in his gloss on Pāṇini’s v. 3, 14, mentions Devānām-priya as a form of benedictory address, along with forms like Dīrghāyuh and Āyusmān. In Bāṇa’s Harṣacharita, the epithet is twice used as an honorific.

<sup>1</sup> Ya hakaṁ upāsake. . . .

Ya sumi pākā sayake . . . (Rūpnath),

(or) prakāsa Sake (as read by Hultsch);

Yaṁ aṁ sumi buppāsake (Maski).

Aṁ sumi Budha-Śake (Maski, as read by Hultsch).

Thus, according to Hultsch, the Rupnath text states: two and a half years and somewhat more (have passed) since I am openly a ‘Śākya,’ or a “Buddha Śākya,” according to Maski text. The word Śākya means a Buddhist. Kauṭilya has the expression Śakyā-jīvakādīn = the Śākyas, the Ājīvakas and others [III. 20], while the Buddha is called Śākyamuni in the Rummindei Pillar Inscription.

<sup>2</sup> Prakamte from verb prakram.

<sup>3</sup> This passage has to be read, as explained in the body of the book, along with that in R.E. XIII which refers to Asoka’s increased devotion to Buddhism following the Kalinga war. This increased devotion practically meant his entering upon a higher stage than that of the idle and indifferent upāsaka. This might indicate the stage of the Bhikkhu-gaṭhi or some other stage as explained in the text.

Asoka had been in this stage “for more than a year” when he issued the first Minor Rock Edict, of which the date must thus be about 260 B.C., i.e., about two years later than his Kalinga conquest with which commenced his real religious progress (prakrama). This is one of the grounds for considering this edict as the earliest of the edicts, the Rock Edicts on their own evidence being issued between 258-57 B.C.

The original has the following readings :

Samghe upayāte [Brahm. and Siddap.] or upete (Ru.) or upayāte (Bair.) or upagate [Maski]. The commentary on Niddesa explains upeto as āsannam gato (approaching), and upagato as upagantvā thito (approaching stayed there).

Thus the expression does not point to the permanent monkhood

Thus during this time the people in Jambudvīpa who had remained unassociated with the gods became associated with the gods.<sup>1</sup> of the emperor, as has been usually assumed. It may merely mean his actual visit to the Saṅgha, such as is related in the legends.

Indeed, the legends seem to throw some light on this obscure passage in the edict. Like the edict, they mark out two stages in Asoka's progress towards Buddhism, the stage of inaction followed by that of exertion. The period of the first stage is also represented in tradition to be three years, as in the edict. The Mahāvamsa and Samantapāsādikā, for instance, relate that for three years from his coronation, Asoka remained in his ancestral faith, a follower of non-Buddhist sects (Rājākira abhisekaṃ pāpuṇitva tīṇi yeva saṃvachchharāṇi bāhiraka pāsaṇḍaṃ parigaṇhi). During this time he also came under the influence of Nigrodha who taught him the Doctrine of Appamāda (= parākrama of the edict) and gradually introduced to him a growing number of Bhikṣus, until in the fourth year Asoka was moved to visit the Saṅgha (gantvā Saṃgham) and invite them to the palace under their leader, Moggaliputta Tissa. From a follower of an individual teacher, Asoka now became the follower of the Saṅgha. This second stage is referred to in the legends by the expression Sāsanappaveśo, which corresponds to Samghe upagato of the edict. The edict calls this stage as one of active pursuit of the Dharma (parākrama). Tradition gives the details and events of such activity, viz., (1) Vihāarakamma, construction of religious edifices [the dhammathambhas of P.E. VII] for three years; (2) his brother, Tissa, and son-in-law, Agnibrahmā, ordained in the fourth year of his reign; (3) his son, Mahendra, and daughter, Saṅghamitrā, ordained in the sixth year, whence Asoka is promoted to the status of Sāsanadāyāda. The tradition is somewhat differently told in the northern text, Divyāvadāna, according to which Asoka was in the first stage drawn towards Buddhism by the monk Bālappaṇḍita, or Samudra, and the second stage was marked by (a) his acceptance of Upagupta as his preceptor, and (b) his pilgrimage to the Buddhist holy places under Upagupta. Even in the first stage, the stage of an ordinary upāsaka, the Div. makes Asoka declare his taking refuge in the Teacher, the Buddha and the Dharma (Saranam ṛiṣim upaimi tam cha Buddham gaṇavaram āryaniveditaṃ cha dharmam), and his readiness to sacrifice everything—children, home, wives, and wealth—for the sake of the kingdom of righteousness (dharmarājyasya sāsane). Dr. B. M. Barua considers the expression—saṃgham upagato or upeto—as a shortening of the usual formulae for an upāsaka, such as Samgham saranam gato or saranattham upeto or Samghassa sissabhāvūpagato [Sumaṅgalav. I. 230-236]. He has also found the more allied expression, saṅgha-gata, in Visuddhimagga [PTS. ed., Vol. I, p. 18].

<sup>1</sup> This passage has not been adequately explained. Its different readings are given below :

Rūpnath Text : Yā imāya kālāya Jambudīpasi

Sahasram Text : Etena cha aṁtalena Jambudīpasi

Brahmagiri Text : Iminā chu kālena

Maski Text : Pure Jambudīpasi

Rūpnath Text : Amisā devā husu te dāni misā katā

Sahasram Text : Aṁmisam devā samta munisā misamdeva katā

Brahmagiri Text : Amisā samānā munisā Jambudīpasi misā devehi

Maski Text : Ye amisā devā husu te dāni misibhūtā

The different translators of the passage up to Hultzsch have all taken it to refer to the commingling of gods with men or men with gods, but have not taken the trouble to explain what exactly the "commingling" means. According to Dr. F. W. Thomas [Cambridge History, p. 505], the meaning is to the following effect : "Asoka claims that in little more than a year he had brought the Brāhman gods to the knowledge of those people in India, i.e., the wild tribes, who had formerly known nothing of them." I suggest the following further and more probable interpretations :

(1) Within this interval, in Jambudvīpa, men who were "unmingled with gods" (i.e., had no gods or no religion) came to be "mingled with gods" (i.e., became religious, or worshippers of gods).

By Asoka's missionary activities following a closer contact with the Saṅgha, the cause of religion had made a considerable advance among the peoples of India.

(2) Within this interval, in Jambudvīpa, men whose gods were disunited had become men whose gods were united.

In other words, within this interval of time, the strife of gods and their worshippers (i.e., of the jarring sects) had largely ceased in the country.

In other edicts, Asoka inculcates religious toleration, and respect for Brāhmaṇas as well as Śramaṇas ; here he states that as the consequence of religious discipline, he reached the stage at which he perceived that the divers religions and the various gods worshipped by different sects could (and ought to be) harmonised. The harmony of religions now became to him a conscious pursuit.

Of these two interpretations, the first is inapplicable to the Rūpnath and Maski inscriptions, which speak only of the union of gods previously disunited, and have no reference to men or to the progress of religion or godliness among men. The Rūpnath inscription definitely states that the gods were disunited before and are now united, i.e., religious strife, the war of sects, had largely ceased ; the Maski inscription is equally clear in its reference to the harmonisation of gods and religions.

The only remaining inscription which has preserved this passage intact is that at Brahmagiri, and it mentions both men and gods. And it can be interpreted in either of the two ways, (1) and (2). "Misā devehi," if construed as "mingled with the gods," would give the same meaning as (1) ; if rendered as "united along with their gods," or "united by or through their gods," it would give the same meaning as (2). Indeed, "amisā samānā munisā" can hardly mean "disunited with the gods," as it must under the interpretation (1); the natural meaning is "disunited among themselves," which agrees with (2).

Accordingly, (2), which suits all the readings, must be the correct rendering.

Asoka then proceeds to point out that the promotion of religious unity among the sects is not the monopoly or special privilege of princes or other highly placed men; amity and toleration in religion can be equally promoted by other men, however low their station in life. Everyone can, and ought to, practise this virtue.

After dilating on a man's obligation in relation to the followers of other religions, this edict (in its latter part called M.R.E. II) teaches a man's duties in other relations of life, e.g., towards parents, preceptors, kinsmen, neighbours, animals, etc. The theme of the edict is a man's duties towards his fellow-men or fellow-creatures in different relations of life.

Besides the above two interpretations, a third interpretation may also be suggested as a very plausible one from the context of the passage. It would appear from the context that Asoka says in effect: "By a little more than a year's exertion, lo! I have made such progress (bādham cha me pakamte . . . pakamasa hi iyaṃ phale): it is, indeed, the men in Jambudvīpa (the best country, according to the sacred texts, for spiritual life) who could thus have 'commerce with gods' in such a short time. But let it not be understood that such progress is only for the great like me. 'It is easier for a camel to enter the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter heaven.' Great or small, all must exert themselves. Then alone will the Pilgrim's Progress (prakrama) lead to the Promised Land (vipula sarga)."

In this interpretation, the exertion and its results are personal to the king, and are not objective in their reference. Asoka is here making an appeal to his people for the moral life on the strength of his own experience, the success of his personal self-exertions. The other interpretations would assume the impossible, viz., that Asoka by a year's propagandist work had made the entire people godlike, or the wilder tribes acquainted with the gods, or had harmonised the warring creeds. Therefore the subjective reference of the passage would make a better sense. As regards the superior spiritual potentialities of the people of Jambudvīpa, on which the Indian sacred works are fond of dwelling, we may refer to Manu's definition of Brahmāvarta as "the land created by the gods," or to a typical passage in the Viṣṇupurāṇam where it is stated that birth in India is the final felicity rewarding spiritual merit accumulated in a thousand lives, that those born in India can surpass even the gods in spiritual progress, and that, accordingly, the gods themselves seek birth in this holy land. This sentiment we find first expressed in the Atharvaveda. [See my Nationalism in Hindu Culture, Asian Library Series, London, 1921].

Of exertion, indeed, is this the result ! But this cannot be attained by the great <sup>1</sup> alone. For the small, too, can attain to a wide heaven of bliss <sup>2</sup> by sustained exertion.<sup>3</sup>

For this purpose has this message been proclaimed that (the small) along with the great may exert themselves in this manner, and that even my frontagers,<sup>4</sup> may know (it), and that this exertion may be of long duration. Nay, it shall increase, shall immensely increase, it shall increase by at least <sup>5</sup> one and a half times.<sup>6</sup> And this message has been caused to be proclaimed 256 times by the king on tour.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Mahātpeneva (i.e., Mahātmanaiva). Kautilya [I. 13] uses the words pradhāna and kṣudraka. Maski and other versions use the form udālake or udālā from Sans. udāra.

<sup>2</sup> Notice that the result of religious exercise (parākrama or prakrama) is described, firstly, as communion with the gods, secondly, as attainment of heaven.

<sup>3</sup> Paka[m]i . . . ṇeṇa = pakamaminenā [R.], palakamaminenā [S.], but in Maski, the word is dhamayulena, i.e., by devotion to dharma. This should settle the meaning of the word dhammayuta used in other edicts [R.E. V, P.E. VII].

<sup>4</sup> These frontagers (antas) are named in R.E. II and XIII. It may be noted that these Minor Rock Edicts meant for the people on the borders of Asoka's empire were consequently located on the borders of that empire, in Mysore. Thus their location was determined not by accident but by design.

<sup>5</sup> Avaradhiya = avaladhiyenā [S.] = avarārdhdhena, i.e., by the least part or minimum (cf. Pāṇini, v. 4, 57).

Cf. Aparārdhdhya = without a maximum.

<sup>6</sup> The Rūpnath text (as well as Sahasram) adds: "This very message is to be inscribed on rocks, and also, where there are pillars of stone here (hadha), on such pillars also is it to be inscribed."

This statement shows that some pillars had existed before Asoka's time, and been fashioned and erected by his predecessors.

It also proves the priority in time of these Minor Pillar Edicts to all other edicts by referring to the issue of edicts by Asoka as being only intended at this time, and not as accomplished facts.

<sup>7</sup> This passage is one of the notorious cruxes of Asokan Inscriptions, and can be best explained on the basis of a comparative study of its different readings, viz.,

Br. Iyaṃ cha sāvaṇe sāvāpīte vyūthena 200 50 6.

Ru. Vyuṭhenā sāvaṇe kaṭe 200 50 6 sata vivāsā ta.

Sa. Iyaṃ cha savane vivūthena duve saparīṇā lāti-satā vivuthā ti 200 50 6.

(1) From the above readings it is evident that vyūthena or vyuṭhenā and vivuthena may be equated, as also vivuthā and vivāsā. Here vivutha is also common to the two equations: therefore the words vyūtha, vyūṭha, vivutha, and vivāsā are cognate. Now vivāsā means, literally, "dwelling out (or away from home)." It may apply to a tour, or a mission, and the days of such a tour (or mission) may be numbered as so many vivāsas. And vyūtha or vyūṭha [= Sans. vyuṣṭa or vyuṣṭa, "absent from home," or "one who has passed (e.g., rātrim, a night)" (Monier Williams' Dictionary)] may mean one who is on a tour or mission.

No doubt we have other uses of vyuṣṭa in the Kauṭīliya [II. 6 and 7] in the sense of "the regnal year, month, fortnight and day"; in the Varāha Śrauta Sūtra [Akulapada, Khaṇḍa III] in the sense of the fourth yāma or last part of night-time; or in the Baudhāyana Dharma Sūtra [IV. 5, 30] in the sense of "having spent the night (in prayer)"; but in these inscriptions of Asoka, vyūtha or vyūṭha has to be derived from vivāsā, and must be connected with a tour or mission, away from home or headquarters.

(2) Next consider the numerals 200 50 6.

The Rūpnath reading "200 50 6 sata vivāsā ta" (or ti, as proposed by Hultzsch) and the Sahasram "duve sapamṇā lāti satā vivuthā ti" both show that this is the number of vivāsas or vivuthas.

If vivāsā or vivutha stands for "days away from headquarters," then we have 256 such days.

If vivāsā or vivutha, like vyūtha, means "officer on a mission or expedition," or "officer despatched," then we have 256 such officers (by whom the proclamation is despatched to as many quarters). In the South Indian inscription of Brahmagiri, the figures 200 50 6 immediately following "sāvāpīte vyūthena" indicate customary particulars about the proclamation, and from the Rūpnath and Sahasram inscriptions, we find that these particulars relate either to the date or the method of despatch. In fact, these inscriptions tell of all the methods by which Asoka sought to give publicity to his proclamations. He would first have them inscribed (lekhāpeta-vālata) on rock (pavatisu) and pillar (silāthambhasi), fixed and permanent; he would also have them circulate in different local areas by despatching his Publicity Officers, or copies of his proclamations. Indeed, we must find a difference of meaning in "sāvāṇe sāvāpīte" of Brahmagiri text and "sāvāṇe kaṭe" of Rūpnath. For while "sāvāpīte" refers to the hearing of the proclamation, kaṭe = kṛita refers to the drafting of the proclamation, according to Paṇini's rules "Adhikṛitya kṛite granthe" and "Kṛite granthe" [IV. 3, 87, 116].

(3) In the Sahasram inscription, "duve sampamṇā lāti-satā" gives in words the meaning of the figures "200 50 6." The expression may be taken as equivalent to Sanskrit "dve ṣaṭpañchāśadadhike śate." Here lāti cannot, as generally supposed, stand for rāti (night), because in that case we have "two (fiftysix nights) hundred" or "two fiftysix (nights hundred)," meaning "nights two hundred fiftysix," but for this to mean 256, we must have the place-value, if not the full decimal scale of notation. Before the device of place-value came to be in vogue, "fifty-six (added to) two hundred" would be necessary, i.e., there must be ati (in the sense of adhika) between fifty-six and two hundred to express 256. Hence lāti contains ati. It cannot possibly stand for rāti, rātri. It is true that the place-value is mentioned in Vasubandhu and the Vyāsa-bhāṣya as in common use, and this may take us back on the most favourable supposition to the second century A.D. as the era of its introduction, but as regards the Asokan inscriptions, the very figures 200 50 6 show that the device of the place-value was not yet in existence. Nor can it be said that "duve sapamñā lāti-satā" simply reads in words the figures 200 50 6; this cannot explain sapamñā for 50 6; nor the intervention of sapamñā between duve and satā.

Turning to the question, what is la in lāti? we have two possible interpretations:

(i) Sapamñālāti = sapamñāsāti = sapamñāsa + ati = fifty-six (added to). Here la must be taken to be the scribe's mistake for sa or śa, or paṃnāla is a dialectical variant of paṃnāsa (though not phonetically sound).

(ii) (Originally) sapamñā + ati = sapamñāyati (or sapamñāyāti) = sapamñālāti.

Now in the Rūpnath inscription itself, we find la for ya, either by the scribe's mistake, or (though this is a phonetic heresy) by a dialectic variant, as in the expression "pavatisu lekhāpeta vālata," l. 4, which must be "pavatisu lekhāpetavāyata," as we find by comparison with "silāthambhasi lākhāpetavayata" of l. 5. We may note that in Rūpnath we have both the forms vāya and vaya, e.g. vivasetavāya ti of l. 5.

But perhaps a third, and in my opinion, the best, interpretation of "sa-pamñā-lāti" is suggested by the Pali grammatical rule—"Yavamadanataralā chāgamā," "the consonants, ya, va, ma, da, na, ta, ra, and 'a' should be placed between the final vowel of the preceding word and the initial vowel of the succeeding word, if a sandhi between those two vowels takes place." The examples cited for this rule include chha + asīti = chhalāsīti, whence we may also derive chha-pamñālāti by sandhi from chhapamñā + ati = chha-pamñālāti. (The Pāli rule was found for me by Mr. C. D. Chatterji.)

(4) Sata in Rūpnath and satā in Sahasram appear at first sight to mean the same thing, but this is not so. In 200 50 6 sata vivāsā (Rūpnath), sata cannot mean hundred, for it would give 25600; and satā in "duve sapamñā lāti-satā" must mean "hundred," as otherwise we do not get 256. In sata vivāsā, therefore, sata stands for santaḥ.

In the light of the above explanations (1), (2), and (3), the following interpretations of the text are possible:

[Note continued on next page.]

II<sup>1</sup>

Thus saith again His Sacred Majesty: Father and mother must be properly served; <sup>2</sup> likewise, a respect <sup>3</sup> for all life should be an established principle, <sup>4</sup> truth must be spoken. These religious requisites or virtues must be promoted.

Likewise the preceptor must be revered by his pupil <sup>5</sup> and proper treatment should be shown towards relations. This is the traditional <sup>6</sup> rule of conduct, and this makes

1. The proclamation has been issued by (me) on tour, when 256 days had been spent.

Naturally a diary of the tour would be kept, and this proclamation was dated the 256th vivāsa or day of absence on tour.

2. Taking vivuthā, vivāsā = missionaries (for despatch) [cf. viva-setavāya of Rūpnath], the proclamation has been issued by (me) on tour and 256 officers have been despatched (to as many districts or quarters) with the proclamations.

It may be noted in passing that  $256 = 16 \times 16$  or  $4 \times 8 \times 8$ . It may be an auspicious number, or may stand for 32 subdivisions of 8 quarters, or for the number of districts in the particular administrative area.

<sup>1</sup> This Edict appears only in the three Mysore places.

<sup>2</sup> Susūsitaviye = śuśruṣitavyaḥ.

<sup>3</sup> Garutā = gurutā; according to Bühler, gurut(vam) but Hultzsch reads garusu = "to elders."

<sup>4</sup> Drahitavyam, lit., = should be made firm; but, according to Hultzsch, the passage means "firmness (of compassion) must be shown"; gerundive of darhyati from root ḍrih.

<sup>5</sup> Antevāsinā, i.e., a pupil who dwells in the house of his teacher.

<sup>6</sup> Purāṇa: the appropriateness of the epithet will be evident from the fact that the rule of conduct herein preached is taken by Asoka from a well-known passage in the Taittiriya Upaniṣad [i. 11] giving the teacher's valedictory exhortations to his retiring pupil. Asoka bases his statement of Dharma on the following sentences of the Upaniṣad: "Satyaṁ vada, dharmaṁ chara, mātṛidevo bhava, pitṛidevo bhava, āchāryadevo bhava, atithidevo bhava." The same code of conduct is also prescribed in the Sigālovāda-sutta (which, according to some scholars, is one of the texts cited in the Bhabru Edict). Seeing the householder's son, Sigāla, worshipping the six quarters, the Buddha said that the six quarters to be daily worshipped are (1) mother and father, (2) teachers, (3) wife and children, (4) friends and kin, (5) servants and working folk, and (6) Brahmins for long life. Thus should one act.<sup>1</sup> Written by the scribe<sup>2</sup> Chapāḍa.

B. THE BHABRU OR BAIRAT NO. 2 ROCK EDICT<sup>3</sup>

His Gracious Majesty,<sup>4</sup> King of Magadha,<sup>5</sup> saluting the Saṅgha, and wishing them all health and happiness, addresses them as follows :

Known is it to you, Reverend Sirs, to what extent is my reverence as well as faith in the Buddha, the Dharma and the Saṅgha.<sup>6</sup> and recluses. The Mahābhārata is also never tired of repeating the same duties of life. A passage selected at random states them thus :

"Vṛiddhopasevā dānañcha | Śauchamutthānameva cha | Sarva-bhūtānukampā cha. . ." [Śānti. Rājadh. P., ch. 59, v. 142.]

This edict gives the first of Asoka's definitions of the Dharma he preaches to his people—the "dhammaguṇā," i.e., the guṇas, or distinguishing marks, of the dharma. This proves the chronological priority of this edict to the Rock and Pillar Edicts where the Dharma is more fully elaborated.

<sup>1</sup> The Jatiṅga Rāmeśvara version has here the following sentence—"Hevaṃ dhamme Devāṇāmpiyasa," i.e., "this is the Dharma of Devāṇāmpriya."

<sup>2</sup> Lipikareṇa : this word occurring in the southernmost edict is, however, written by the scribe in the northern Kharoṣṭhī script, probably to show off his knowledge of different styles of writing. The script also indicates that the lipikara had come all the way from the north-western frontiers to serve in the southernmost parts of the empire.

<sup>3</sup> This edict was engraved on a small block of granite which it was not difficult to remove to Calcutta where it is now in the Asiatic Society's building. It lay near the rock at Bairat bearing the M.R.E. I, and may therefore be taken of the same date.

<sup>4</sup> Priyadasi, lit., "one who sees to the agreeable (priya), i.e., the good, of others; who wishes well of others"; and thus an appropriate title for the Rājā who is so called prakṛitirāñjanāt, i.e., from satisfying his people; also interpreted as "one who looks with kindness upon everything," "one of pleasing countenance."

<sup>5</sup> Māgadhe : the full expression Priyadasi lājā Māgadhe should be taken as "Piyadasi, Rājā of Magadha," in which case the edict would be addressed to the Saṅgha in general, and not to the Saṅgha of Magadha (as has been sometimes interpreted), to whom it need not be addressed from distant Rajputana.

<sup>6</sup> This declaration of his faith in the Buddhist Trinity may be connected and compared with his statement in the M.R.E. I—Samghe upagate—which has created so much controversy as to its meaning.

Whatsoever has been said, Reverend Sirs, by the Lord Buddha, all that has of course been well said.<sup>1</sup> But of such, what has been selected by me that the True Dharma may be everlasting<sup>2</sup> I may be privileged to state.

The following, Reverend Sirs, are the passages of the scripture :

1. The excellent treatise on Moral Discipline (Vinaya-samukasa).<sup>3</sup>

2. The course of conduct followed by the sages—modes of ideal life (Āliya-vasāni).<sup>4</sup>

3. Fears of what may 'come about in future (Anāgata-bhayāni)<sup>5</sup>—dangers threatening the Saṅgha and the doctrine.

4. Poem on "Who is an hermit?"<sup>6</sup> (Muni-gāthā).

5. Discourse on Quietism<sup>7</sup> (Mauneya-sūte).

6. The Questions of Upaṭiṣya<sup>8</sup> (Uṭṭaṭṭa-sūte).

<sup>1</sup> Identified with a passage in Āṅguttara [IV. p. 164] by Poussin.

<sup>2</sup> The passage occurs in Mahāvīyūtpatti and the Āṅguttara.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Sāṃukkaṃsika-dhammaḍḍesaṇā [Udāna, v. 3], an expression applied to the Four Truths expounded by the Buddha in his First Sermon at Sarnath, which Asoka must have in mind here, according to A. J. Edmunds [JRAS, 1913, p. 387]. Dr. B. M. Barua identifies it with the Śigālovāda-Suttanta [Dīgha Nikāya, iii. 180-194] on the ground that, as stated in the commentary of Buddhaghosa, it applies to householders (whence it is called Gihivīnaya) and, indeed, to all classes, to monks, nuns, and the laity, for whose study Asoka intended it. The Suttanta further deals with "Ariyassa Vinaya," i.e., same as "Vinaya-samukasa," Ideal Discipline, as phrased by Asoka [JRAS, 1915, p. 809]. Dr. Barua's translations are partially utilised here. Another identification has been proposed by Mr. S. N. Mitra [IA, xlviii., 1919, pp. 8-11], viz., Sappurisasutta [Majjhima, iii. pp. 37-45], which uses the words Vinayādhāra and attān ukkaṃseti = sāṃukkaṃso.

<sup>4</sup> Āṅguttara, II. p. 27, as pointed out by Dharmānanda Kosambi and Lanman in IA, 1912, pp. 37-40; Ang. V. p. 29 (Saṅgīti-sutta) according to Rhys Davids [JRAS, 1898, p. 640]; Hultsch takes the expression to mean ariya vamsāni, "lineages or traditional ways of the holy."

<sup>5</sup> Āṅguttara, III. p. 103, Sutta, 78 [Ib.].

<sup>6</sup> Sutta Nipāta, i. 12, p. 36 [Ib.].

<sup>7</sup> Same as Nālaka Sutta of Sutta Nipāta, iii. 11, pp. 131-4.

<sup>8</sup> Same as Sāriputta-Sutta [Ibid. iv. 16, pp. 176-9]. Rhys Davids [JRAS, 1893, p. 639] identifies it with Vinaya, i. 39, 41.

7. The Sermon to Rāhula <sup>1</sup> beginning with the Sermon on Falsehood, as delivered by the Lord Buddha (Lāghulovāde musāvādam <sup>2</sup> adhigichya <sup>3</sup>).

These sections of the Dharma, Reverend Sirs, I desire that most of the reverend monks and nuns should repeatedly listen to <sup>4</sup> and meditate, and in the same way, the lay-disciples, male as well as female (should act).

For this reason, Reverend Sirs, am I causing this to be inscribed that they may know of my intention.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Majjhima Nikāya, i. 414-420. Regarding these various identifications of these texts, a clue may also be found in the story related by Buddhaghosa in his Visuddhimagga of an ideal monk who followed the code of conduct prescribed by the Buddha in the following Suttas, viz. (1) Ratha-Vinīta-sutta (same as No. 6 of Asoka), (2) Nālaka-sutta (Asoka's No. 5), (3) Mahā-Ariyavaṃsa (corresponding to No. 2, Aliyavasāni, of Asoka), and (4) Tuvaṭaka-sutta, in which the Buddha discourses on paṭipadū (religious practices), pāṭi-mokkha, and samādhi, and these may well make up the cream of the Vinaya, Vinaya-samukhase or Vinaya par excellence. What Buddhaghosa, therefore, selected as the most important and representative texts for a Bhikṣu might well have been cited by Asoka too. I owe this very important reference to Mr. C. D. Chatterji.

<sup>2</sup> The form musā for mṛiṣā, false, used in this edict at Bairat, should make it certain that the amisā used in the other edict at Bairat [M.R.E. I] must be a different word which has thus been rightly connected with Sanskrit misra.

<sup>3</sup> The original is read by some (e.g., Kern) as adhigichya = adhikṛitya (Ib.), and by some (e.g., Michelson) as adhigidhya = adhigrihya (?)

<sup>4</sup> Sunayu or suneyu (Hultsch) = śṛiṇeyuh; this shows, as remarked by Senart [Inscriptions of Piyadasi, p. 70], how learning was still being handed down by oral tradition and not by written books.

<sup>5</sup> This edict, as is evident, throws great light upon the history of the Buddhist canonical literature. It also definitely makes out Asoka as a Buddhist and, more than that, as having some authority over the church, from his injunctions to all its classes, lay or monastic, male or female. Senart [Inscriptions, ii. 103] finds it strange that, if the Buddhist canon was defined and closed by the time of Asoka, as stated in southern legends, he should select for indicating the Buddha's lessons "pieces so little characteristic, so short, and so devoid of dogmatic importance as those which he cites appear to be, and that, too, without even alluding to the great collection of which the title alone would have been infinitely more significant, and to which it would be so natural to appeal," when addressing the Saṅgha.

It may also be noted that this edict, dealing only with matters

C. THE KALINGA ROCK EDICTS

I

[DHAULI]<sup>1</sup>

The High Officers of Tosalī<sup>2</sup> in charge of the administration of the city, are to be addressed as follows at the command of His Sacred Majesty :

Whatsoever I view (as right) I want to see how it concerning the Saṅgha, is also addressed directly to the Saṅgha, whereas there are three others, the Minor Pillar Edicts at Sarnath, Sanchi, and Kosambi, which, though similarly dealing with matters affecting the Saṅgha, are not, however, addressed to the Saṅghas, but to the Mahāmātras concerned, those officers whom Asoka appointed to look after the different religious sects, as stated in R.E. V. Thus it is reasonable to infer that the Bhabru Edict is not addressed to the Mahāmātras because it was issued prior to their very creation or institution, and, therefore, this is another proof showing that the Bhabru Edict was prior to the main body of the Rock Edicts.

<sup>1</sup> The inscription on the Dhauli rock appears in three columns, R.E. I-VI in the middle, R.E. VII-X and XIV in the right, followed by K.R.E. II, while K.R.E. I occupies the whole of the left column.

<sup>2</sup> Instead of Tosalī, the Jaugada text has Samāpā. The term used for these officers of the cities is Mahāmātānagala-viyohālaka = Nagaravyāvahārika-Mahāmātras, corresponding to the term Paura-Vyāvahārika used by Kauṭilya [I. 12] for one of the eighteen chief officers of the state (tīrthas). Elsewhere [IV. 5] Kauṭilya uses the expression "Nāgarikamahāmātra" corresponding to the expression "Mahāmātānagala," as used in I. 10 of the Jaugada text of this edict, showing how both Asoka and Kauṭilya are at one in giving the city-magistrate the rank of a Mahāmātra. The Nāgarika of Kauṭilya as the chief executive officer of the city was to the nagara or city what the Samāhartā was to the janapada or province. The administration of both was modelled on a common plan: the city as well as the province was divided into four parts, of which each was under a Sthānika, who had the Gopa as his subordinate officer, in charge of ten to forty households in the case of the city, and of five to ten villages in the case of the province [II. 35, 36]. Kauṭilya also calls the prefect of the city pura-mukhya [I. 16].

Regarding Tosalī, Hultzsch refers to two copperplate inscriptions found in the Cuttack district, where northern and southern Tosalī are mentioned [Ep. Ind. ix. 286].

can be carried out in practice and fulfilled by proper means.

And this is regarded by me as the principal means to this end, viz., (to give) instructions to you.

For you are placed over thousands of souls <sup>1</sup> with the object of getting to the people's <sup>2</sup> affection.

All men are as my children.<sup>3</sup> As, on behalf of my own children, I desire that they may be provided with complete welfare and happiness both in this world and the next, the same I desire also for (all) men.<sup>4</sup>

Now you do not understand how far this matter goes.<sup>5</sup>

Some individual person understands this, but he, too, only a part, not the whole.

See to it then, although you are well provided for.<sup>6</sup> In administration,<sup>7</sup> it happens that some individual undergoes imprisonment or torture, which accidentally becomes the cause of his death,<sup>8</sup> and many other persons are deeply

<sup>1</sup> The charge of these city-magistrates is quite an extensive one, next to a governorship.

The Rājūka or Governor in P.E. IV is described as being set over "many hundred thousands of people."

<sup>2</sup> Su munisānam : here su = Sans. svit (Hultsch).

<sup>3</sup> The king's fatherly relationship to his subjects is also emphasised in the Kauṭīliya : "Nivṛitta-parihārān pitevānugrihṇīyāt," the king shall favour like a father those who have passed the period for remission of taxes [II. 1]; "sarvatra chopahatān pitevānugrihṇīyāt," the king shall always protect the afflicted among his people as a father his sons [IV. 3].

The Mahābhārata [Śānti-P. Rājdh. ch. 56, vv. 44, 46] compares the king's relationship to his subjects to the mother's relationship to her son. Like the mother, the king should sacrifice for the good of his subjects whatever he may personally like.

<sup>4</sup> Hultsch quotes Aśvaghoṣa's Buddha-Charita, ii. 35 : "Svābhyah prajābhyo hi yathā tathaiiva sarvaprajābhyah śivamāśaśamse."

<sup>5</sup> Avagamuke = Yāvad gamakaḥ.

<sup>6</sup> Suvihitā.

<sup>7</sup> Nītiyam = daṇḍa-nītiyam ; J. has bahuka, "frequently."

<sup>8</sup> Badhanamitika, one whose bandhana becomes his anta or end. The severity of judicial torture in Mauryan administration which Asoka tried only to mitigate by prevention of its arbitrary application is fully described in the Kauṭīliya [IV. 8, 9, 11]. We have accounts of mutilation, and fines in lieu thereof, of trial and torture to extort confessions, and arbitrary applications of torture which aggrieved<sup>1</sup> over it. There must you demand that the Middle Path (i.e., moderation or justice) be observed. But one cannot achieve success through the following traits: envy, volatility, cruelty, impatience, want of application, laziness, and lethargy. "That these traits be not mine" is to be wished for. The root of the whole matter is, indeed, Steadiness and Patience. He who is tired in administration will not rise up; but one should move, advance and march on.<sup>2</sup>

He who will look after this<sup>3</sup> must tell you: "See to the discharge of your obligations<sup>4</sup> (to the king). Such and such is the instruction of His Sacred Majesty."

Observance of same produces great good, non-observance great calamity. For if one fails to observe this, there will not be attainment of either heaven or royal favour. The reason why (there is) my excessive thought (is) that of this duty (there is) a twofold gain,<sup>5</sup> for by properly fulfilling it were punished. Hultzsck, following Lüders, takes badhanam̐tika = baṁdhanām̐tika and the sentence as "tena baṁdhanām̐tikah (prāp-tah)," i.e., an order cancelling the imprisonment is obtained by him.

<sup>1</sup> Daviye dukhiyati; the Jaugada text has bahuke vedayati.

<sup>2</sup> Etaviye, after which the J. text adds the word nītiyam, i.e., make progress in administrative work.

<sup>3</sup> Hevaṁmeva e dakheya = eve dakheyā (Jaugada), i.e., evaṁ e dakheyā. It refers to the Mahāmātras mentioned at the end of the inscription as "overseers" of the administration.

<sup>4</sup> Ānamne = āṇṇīnyam; previously it was read as amnam̐ ne = Sans. ājñāṁ naḥ (Bühler) or anyat + naḥ (Lüders). Hultzsck now has settled the correct reading. Jaugada reads as follows: "Ānamne nijhapetaviye."

<sup>5</sup> V. A. Smith translates it thus: "Ill performance of this duty can never gain my regard." The difficulty is about the word duāhale = dvāhara, "yielding a double profit" (āhara) or procuring two, nom. sing., neut. adj. The word ahāle occurs in the Rūpnath text of M.R.E. I. But Hultzsck, following Franke, takes it as dur + āhara, imperfect carrying out, and translates the passage thus: "For how (could) my mind be pleased (me kute mano-atileke) if one badly fulfils this duty?" But should not duāhale in this sense be dulāhale? Then, again, the proper meaning of the word atileka = excess is not taken into account in this translation. Thus the interpretation of Bühler and Senart is followed here.

you will win both heaven and release from your obligations to me.

And this edict is to be listened to on (every day of) the Tiṣya,<sup>1</sup> and in the intervals between the Tiṣya days, on auspicious<sup>2</sup> occasions, it may be listened to even by individuals.

Thus doing you will be able<sup>3</sup> to accomplish (this object).

For this purpose has this edict been inscribed here that the city Magistrates<sup>4</sup> may strive all the time that there might not be the imprisonment of the citizens or their torture without cause.<sup>5</sup>

And for this purpose shall I depute every five years [a Mahāmātra (Jaugaḍa text)] who would be neither harsh nor violent but considerate in action,<sup>6</sup> (in order to ascertain whether (the Judicial Officers) understanding this purpose are acting thus, as (is) my injunction.<sup>7</sup>

But from Ujjayinī, too, the prince<sup>8</sup> (governor) will, for

<sup>1</sup> This day might have a special significance in the life of Asoka.

<sup>2</sup> Khanasi khanasi ; on frequent occasions (Hultzsch).

<sup>3</sup> Chaghatha connected with the root śak, whence chakiye in K.R.E. II, Dh., M.R.E., Sah. and Bair.

<sup>4</sup> Nagala-viyohālākā ; mahāmālā-nagalaka in J. Cf. Kautilya's Nāgaraka-mahāmātra already cited.

<sup>5</sup> Palikilese ; the word parikleśa also occurs in the Kauṭīliya [IV. 8], where the Superintendent of the Jail is forbidden under a penalty to cause parikleśa to prisoners.

See on this subject R.E. V.

<sup>6</sup> Sakhinālan.bhe = ślākṣṇārambhaḥ : I am not taking the word "ārambha" in the sense of slaughter, because there is no reference in this edict to the subject of the sanctity of animal life.

This passage, as explained in the book, is important for determining the chronological order of the edicts. We find here Asoka's first conception of his scheme of Quinquennial Tours for his officers, which is fully elaborated in some of his Rock Edicts which are therefore later than these Kaliṅga Edicts.

<sup>7</sup> As read, restored, and translated by Hultzsch.

<sup>8</sup> "Ujenite pi chu Kumāle . . ." followed by "hemeva Takhasilā te pi," with which may be compared the expression "Tosaliyam Kumāle" in K.R.E. II, l. 1, Dhauḷi text, and the expression "Suvarinagiritile ayaputasa." These expressions show that Kumāras or Aryaputras, princes of the royal family, were posted as viceroys or the self-same purpose, depute a similar<sup>1</sup> body of officers<sup>2</sup> and will not allow (more than) three years to elapse.<sup>3</sup> governors in the cities mentioned, viz. Ujjayinī, Takṣaśilā, Tosali and Suvarṇagiri, but that these princes are not mentioned as being Asoka's sons. Where Asoka refers to his own sons and descendants, he uses the definite expression like "putrā cha potrā cha prapotrā cha Devānaṃpriyasa . . ." as in R.E. IV, Girnar, or "me putrā potā cha prapotrā cha" in R.E. VI, Ib. Thus the princes that are referred to here as viceroys must be taken to be Asoka's brothers, and not his sons. That one of his brothers named Tissa was appointed by him as his viceroy in 270 B.C., and continued as such up to 266 B.C., we know from the Mahāvamsa [v. 33, 171]. According to Asokan chronology as worked out here, the date of this edict would be 259 B.C. when Asoka would be 45 years old, but not the father of so many sons old enough to be appointed as his viceroys. The only known son of Asoka who was old enough to be his viceroy then was Mahendra, but he became a monk as early as 264 B.C., as recorded in the Mahāvamsa, after having officiated as viceroy in the place of Tissa for a very short time. The other known son of Asoka who was appointed as his viceroy and posted to Taxila is Kuṇāla according to the Divyāvadāna, but the date of his birth is worked out to be 263 B.C., and of his appointment as Viceroy of Taxila, 235 B.C. No doubt Asoka might have one or two sons who in 257 B.C. were eligible by age for vicerealty, taking the minimum viceregal age to be 18, at which age Asoka himself was sent out by his father as his viceroy to Ujjayinī. But who these sons were we do not know, though Asoka might have had children born to him between 282 B.C. and 263 B.C., the dates of birth respectively of Saṅghamitrā and Kuṇāla. Perhaps these children might be Tivara mentioned in an edict and Chārumatī of Nepal tradition. At any rate, the princes of his inscriptions whom he refers to as his viceroys need not be taken to be all his own sons.

<sup>1</sup> I.e., with similar moral qualifications.

<sup>2</sup> Vagam : Kautilya also uses the word varga in the same sense [I. 7]. The usual meaning of varga in Sanskrit is "class." But earlier in this edict, in l. 9, the word jane is used where the Jaugaḍa text uses the word varga. Similarly, the word varga is used in R.E. X, where Girnar reads jana. Thus the expression hedisameva vagam may be translated as "a person of the same description" [Hultzsch]. Cf. the term nikāyā used for classes of officials in R.E. XII.

<sup>3</sup> It is difficult to understand why the Vicerealties of Ujjain and Taxila needed a more frequent inspection in regard to their criminal administration than the newly-annexed province of Kāliṅga. Perhaps it was because they were so distant from the imperial headquarters and "the master's eye." Later, when R.E. III was issued, the rule was that this administrative tour or anusamyāna should be undertaken every five years in every province of the empire (sarvata vijite mama) without any exception.

So also from Takhasilā.<sup>1</sup>

When . . . these High Officers<sup>2</sup> would thus set out on tour,<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> According to Divyāvadāna [ch. xxvii.], Taxila belonged to the people called the Svaśas (Svaśarājyam, p. 372), and was always in a state of revolt. In the time of Bindusāra, the revolt could not be checked by his first viceroy, Prince Susīma, who was then replaced by Asoka. Towards the latter part of Asoka's own reign, when Tiṣyarakṣitā was his Chief Queen, i.e., about 236 B.C., according to Mahāvamsa, xx. 3, report was received by Asoka of hostility at Taxila (Rājñośokasya Uttarāpathe Takṣaśilā nagaram viruddham), whereupon Asoka deputed his son Kuṇāla, then 28 years old, to Taxila for its subjection [Div. p. 407]. But, as already explained, this edict refers to the early part of Asoka's reign when there was no such trouble at Taxila, and hence to some brother of Asoka as his viceroy, or some unknown son of his who must be old enough for the post, one who should be born about 275 B.C. at the latest to be 18 years old in 257 B.C.

<sup>2</sup> The officers sent out on inspection were of the rank of Mahāmātras, as indicated here in the Dhauli text and above in the Jaugaḍa text.

<sup>3</sup> Officers would be sent, each according to his turn (anu), once every five years, on tour through their charge (and not transferred out of it, as understood by V. A. Smith) in prosecution of their ordinary, as well as these new and special duties. The ordinary sense of the word anusamyāna seems quite suitable. Besides, Buddhaghosa defines anusamyāna as follows: "Tato tato gantvā pachchavekkhanam," i.e., going here and there for purposes of inspection [Samantapāsādikā]. This last passage I owe to Mr. Charan Das Chatterji. He has also found a passage in Āṅguttara, i. pp. 59-60, where it is stated that anusamyāna in frontier districts (pachchantime janapade anusaññātum) is not easy for kings at a time when raiders are abroad. The commentary explains the expression as follows: "pachchantime janapade anusaññātum ti—gāmāvāsa-karaṇatthāya, setu-atthāya, pokkharāṇi-khaṇāpanatthāya, sālādīnam karaṇatthāya pachchantime janapade anusāsītum pi na sukham hoti"; i.e., "it is not easy to go into the frontier districts to see to the construction of residences in the villages, of public works, halls, and similar works, or excavation of tanks." Asoka's full purpose in instituting anusamyāna for his officers is both administrative (including judicial as here) and religious, as defined in R.E. III.

It may be noted that Kauṭilya [II. 9] provides for transfer of government servants (yuktas) from one post to another to prevent embezzlement (viparyasyāt cha karmasu). He also uses the word niryāṇa for anusamyāna for the king's tour [I. 21].

then they would, without neglecting their own duties, will ascertain this as well, viz., whether (the Judicial Officers) are carrying out this also thus, as is the king's injunction.<sup>1</sup>

II <sup>2</sup>

[JAUGADA]

His Sacred Majesty thus says: At Samāpā<sup>3</sup> the High Officers entitled to receive the king's messages<sup>4</sup> are to be addressed as follows:

Whatsoever I view (as right) I want to see how it can be executed in practice and fulfilled by proper means.

And this is regarded by me as the principal means to this end, viz., to give my instructions to you.

All men are as my children; as, on behalf of my own children, I desire that they may be provided with complete welfare and happiness both in this world and the next, the same I desire also for all men.

It might occur to the unconquered borderers (to ask): "What does the king desire with regard to us?"<sup>5</sup>

This alone is my desire with regard to the borderers (that) they may understand that the king desires this (that) they should be free from fear of me, but should trust in me;

<sup>1</sup> As translated by Hultzsch.

<sup>2</sup> The fourteen Rock Edicts were not all published in Kalinga. R.E. XI, XII, and XIII were omitted, and in their place were added these two special edicts after R.E. XIV, of which this one comes first upon the rock and should have been described as first, but the usual editions of the edicts reverse the order, and this reversed order is accordingly followed here also.

The two separate Kalinga Edicts appear on the Jaugada rock apart from the main edicts within a space enclosed by lines. The upper portion of this space is marked by the Svastika symbol figured at the two corners, while the lower portion by the letter ma figured four times along the line of its separation. According to Harit Krishna Deb [JASB, 17, 232 f.], the supposed Svastika symbol may be taken as a monogram made up of two Brāhmi O's and the ma the final letter of the sacred syllable Om.

<sup>3</sup> In the Dhauli text the edict is addressed to "the Prince, and the Mahāmātras of Tosālī."

<sup>4</sup> Lājavachanika.

<sup>5</sup> As translated by Hultzsch.

(that) they would receive from me only happiness and not sorrow ;<sup>1</sup> that they should further understand (this) that the king will tolerate in them what can be tolerated ;<sup>2</sup> that they may be persuaded by me<sup>3</sup> to practise Dharma or morality ; (and that) they may gain both this world and the next.

And for this purpose am I instructing you, (viz. that) by this do I render myself free from debt<sup>4</sup> (to animate beings), that I instruct you, and make known to you my will, my determination, and promise, not to be shaken.

Therefore acting thus,<sup>5</sup> should you perform your duties and assure them that they may understand that "the king is to us even as a father ; (that) he feels for us even as he feels for himself ; we are to him as his children."

By instructing you, and making known to you my will, my determination and vow inviolable, I shall have (i.e., post) for this end officers in all provinces.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Kham = dukkham (Dh.).

<sup>2</sup> The king's gift of freedom to these border peoples is conditional upon their conformity to his moral code.

<sup>3</sup> Mamam nimitam, i.e., by my instrumentality.

<sup>4</sup> Anane, which is explained here in the light of the expression bhūtānam ānaniyam yeham of R.E. VI, Dhauli.

<sup>5</sup> Sa devam kaṭu (i.e., kṛtvā).

<sup>6</sup> Desā āyutike, desāvutike, Dhauli ; Āyuti = Sans. Āyukti ; while Āvuti = Sans. Āyukti, an order, is used in P.E. IV. The term Yukta is used in R.E. III for government servants. Here the term Āyukta indicates the provincial officers, the Mahāmātras, whom Asoka would depute on inspection duty from Pāṭaliputra, and also from Ujjayinī and Takṣaśilā under the princely viceroys, as stated in K.R.E. I. In P.E. I, these officers are called Anta-mahāmātras, as they had to deal with the "unconquered antas" as described here, who might also include the "forest folks," the aṭaviyo of R.E. XIII, but Kautilya [I. 16] mentions a special class of officers for them, called the Aṭavīpāla.

Kautilya uses the term yukta for the lower government servants with their assistants, called upayuktas, and their subordinates (puṛuṣas) [II. 5]. He considers them as not above embezzlement of public funds [II. 9]. Manu also, while giving to the Yuktas the charge of stolen property, does not consider them above theft [VIII. 34]. Kautilya, instead of Yuktas, sometimes uses the terms Yogapuruṣa (p. 245) or Yugyapuruṣa for "employees," from the root yuj, to

For you have the capacity to produce their confidence, their good and happiness both in this world and the next. Thus doing you will also win heaven and release from your obligations to me (or win me release from my debts).

And for this purpose has this edict been inscribed in this place that the High Officers may be all the time at work for the confidence and practice of religion of these frontier peoples.

This same edict is also to be proclaimed at the commencement of every quarter of the year on the Tiṣya day, and also in the intervals between the Tiṣya days and even to individuals, when an occasion offers.<sup>1</sup>

Thus working should you strive towards accomplishment.

D. THE FOURTEEN ROCK EDICTS

I

[SHAHBAZGARHI]

This religious edict <sup>2</sup> has been caused to be inscribed <sup>3</sup> by His Sacred and Gracious Majesty.

Here <sup>4</sup> not a single living creature should be slaughtered employ (whence Yukta and Yoga). A commentator on Kautilya explains the term upayukta [II. 8] as an officer placed above the Yuktas (yuktānām upari niyuktaḥ).

<sup>1</sup> Khane samitam.

<sup>2</sup> The term dhrama-dipi or dhamma lipi applies to the entire series of the fourteen Rock Edicts issued in one corpus, as also to that of the seven Pillar Edicts. Senart remarks: "The whole has been considered as forming one ensemble, and must have been engraved at the same time" [Inscriptions of Piyadasi, vol. ii. p. 81].

<sup>3</sup> The Jaugada text, of all other texts, mentions the very hill appointed for the inscription—" Khapimṅgalasi [Khepimṅgalasi = brown in the sky (Hultzsch)] pavatasi likhāpitā "; while in the Dhauli text the name of the hill is lost in "... si pavatasi," and this hill must have been a different hill too.

<sup>4</sup> Ilida, i.e., here, at Pāṭaliputra, as stated in R.E. V, Girnar; it is, however, used in the sense of "in my dominion" in R.E. XIII (hida raja-viṣavaspi in I. 9) and M.R.E. (hadha, I. 4) Rūpnath. I prefer the former meaning to limit the operation of Asoka's new ordinance, which is far too sweeping in its scope, to his own city.

and sacrificed. Nor should any Samāja be held.<sup>1</sup> For His Sacred and Gracious Majesty sees much objection in such samāja.

where it might be more justifiable than if it had been applied all over his empire against the religious usage of the majority of its subjects, and against even his own ordinance as published in his P.E. V, which protects from slaughter only a few specified "living beings."

<sup>1</sup> See notes on the word of Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar [IA, xli. pp. 255-7] and Thomas [JRAS, 1914].

The objectionable kind of Samajjā is described in the Dīgha Nikāya [vol. iii. p. 183, P.T.S.] as comprising the six features of "dancing, singing, music, story-telling, cymbals, and tam-tams." Again, in the Brahmajāla Sutta [Dīgha, i. p. 6], there are mentioned several objectionable shows (visuka-dassanam) marked by some of the above features. One of these is called Pekkhama, which Buddhaghosa has explained as naṭa-samajjā, thereby indicating that the other shows mentioned in this passage are to be taken as so many varieties of samajjā, some of which would be highly objectionable from Asoka's standpoint: e.g., the fights arranged between animals such as "elephants, horses, buffaloes, bulls, goats and rams," and even between "birds like cocks and quails." Another kind of samajjā is described in the Commentary on Dhammapada [vol. iv. p. 59, P.T.S.], where it is stated how it was organised by a company of actors (nāṭakā) numbering even 500, who would give yearly or six-monthly performances before the king at Rājagṛiha for large rewards. These performances would last for seven days, at which the chief feat shown was that of a damsel walking, dancing, and singing on a horizontal bar. The mischief caused by this samajjā was that one of the spectators in the amphitheatre (mañchātimañcheṭhila), Uggasena, the son of a rich merchant, fell in love with that performing damsel. The same passage tells us how in those days these actors used to exhibit their arts at villages, towns, and the capital cities of the country (gāmanigamarājadhānīsu). This joy of popular life was now being restricted by a puritanical emperor!

In the Vinaya, we read of a samāja held on a hill at Rājagṛiha with dancing, singing and music [ii. 5, 2, 6], and another for a feast [iv. 37, 1]. Several uses of the word also occur in the Jātakas: e.g., Jāt. iii. 541, 20 (club fight); 318; 545.

The epigraphic uses of the word are seen in the expression "usava-samāja-karapanāhi" in the Khāravela Inscription, and also in "usava-samāja-kārakasa" in a Nasik Cave Inscription.

The form samajyā is also known in Sanskrit, but the usual form is samāja. In the Mahābhārata, the samāja figures as a Śaiva festival [Hopkins, Epic Mythology, pp. 65, 220] accompanied by drinking, song and dance. But the secular samāja is held in an amphitheatre

But there are also certain varieties of same which are considered commendable <sup>1</sup> by His Sacred and Gracious Majesty.

Formerly in the kitchen of His Sacred and Gracious Majesty, daily many hundred thousands <sup>2</sup> of living creatures were slaughtered for purposes of curries. But now when this religious edict is being inscribed, only three living creatures are slaughtered, two peacocks and one deer, and the deer, too, not regularly. Even these three living creatures afterwards shall not <sup>3</sup> be slaughtered.

(raṅga or prekṣāgāra) with śibikās, camps, and mañchas, platforms, for the accommodation of different classes and corporations (śreṇis and gaṇas) assembling (1) for a public feast with varieties of meat dishes, or to witness (2) a joust at arms [Harivaṃśa, vv. 4528-38, 4642-58], (3) a display of military manoeuvres [Ādi. P. chh. 134 f.], or (4) a svayamvara ceremony accompanied by dancing, singing and music [Ib. ch. 185; cited by Dr. Bhandarkar].

Thomas quotes Mbh. i. 185, 29, which refers to a game being held in an arena, samājavāṭa, surrounded by platforms, mañcha, and hence the game might be animal fights. For its derivative sense, the samāja may be compared with the English sporting term, "a meet."

Kautilya in one passage [II. 25] refers to utsava, samāja and yātrā, where the drinking of wine was unrestricted for four days, and in another passage [XIII. 5] points out the conqueror's duty of conciliating the conquered people by respecting their national devotion to their country, their religion (deśa-daivata), and their institutions, viz., their utsava, samāja and vihāra.

The word also occurs in Vātsāyana Kāmasūtra [Bk. i. ch. iv. 26], not in a technical but a general sense, of a gathering at the temple of Sarasvatī once a month or a fortnight to hear the songs of local or outside musicians with dancing.

Lastly, we may note that Asoka's grandfather Chandragupta, used to hold annually a great festival for animal fights. There were butting contests between rams, wild bulls, elephants, and even rhinoceroses, and also races between chariots drawn by two oxen with a horse between [Ælian]. These public shows organised by his predecessors Asoka now rules out.

<sup>1</sup> These are the shows organised by Asoka himself, as described in R.E. IV.

<sup>2</sup> Probably an exaggeration, from which the edicts are not free sometimes, like the literary works much maligned on that ground. The Mahāvamśa relates how Asoka's father entertained 60,000 Brahmans daily, and Asoka did the same for three years [v. 34].

<sup>3</sup> This was not done for the poor peacocks which do not figure in the list of protected animals and birds given in P.E. V. The Rāmāyaṇa

II

[GIRNAR]

Everywhere within the dominion<sup>1</sup> of His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King, and likewise among the frontagers such as the Cholas,<sup>2</sup> Pāṇḍyas,<sup>3</sup> the Satiyaputra,<sup>4</sup> the

[ii. 91, 70] mentions the mayūra as a food of kings, while Buddhaghosa states that the "flesh of a pea-fowl is delicious" to the people of Madhyadeśa (including Magadha). [Sāvatthappakāsini, Commentary on Saṃyutta Nikāya, cited for me by Mr. C. D. Chatterji.]

<sup>1</sup> Vijitamhi or vijitasi as contrasted with prachamitesu or am̐tā, i.e., peoples, not his subjects, but of countries outside but bordering on the limits of his dominion. Cf. the reference to am̐tā, frontagers, in M.R.E. I, to am̐tānam̐ avijitānam̐ (i.e., independent neighbours) of K.R.E. II, to am̐tesu of R.E. XIII and to Aparāntas in R.E. V. The terms anta and pratyanta have a political, and the term Aparānta, a purely geographical, reference. Kautilya [I. 17] uses the term pratyanta which the commentator explains as mlechchhadēśa, to which a king should deport his disloyal sons.

<sup>2</sup> The plural form, according to Bhandarkar [Asoka, p. 38], indicates two Choḍa kingdoms, one of which he identifies with Ptolemy's Soretai (Tamil, soṛa = choṛa), with its capital Orthoura = Uraiyur near Trichinopoly, and the other, the northern kingdom, with Sora, with its capital Arkatos = Arcot.

<sup>3</sup> Ptolemy also speaks of the Pandinoi with their city of Modoura = Madura, while Varāhamihira (sixth century A.D.) knows of the Uttara-Pāṇḍyas, showing there were two Pāṇḍya kingdoms, northern and southern [Ib. 40].

<sup>4</sup> Identified by V. A. Smith with "the Satyamaṅgalam Taluk of Coimbatore district along the Western Ghats and bordering on Mysore, Malabar, Coimbatore and Coorg. A town of the same name commands the Gazalhatti Pass from Mysore, formerly of strategical importance. The Satyamaṅgala country was also included in the territory colonised by the Great Migration (Brihadcharaṇam), possibly that led by Bhadrabāhu in the days of Chandragupta Maurya" [Asoka, p. 161, and JRAS, 1919, p. 584 n.]. A writer in JRAS [1918, p. 541] argues for identifying Satiyaputra with the people of Kāñchipura, the place of Asokan stūpas as recorded by Yuan Chwang and known to the orthodox as the Satyavrata country. Another writer in the JRAS [1923, p. 412] thinks it is the same as Satyabhūmi, the name of the country north of Kerala, as mentioned in some early Tamil works composed on the western coast. Satiya is taken by Hultzsch to be Sattiya = Satviya, with which we may compare the Satvats of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa [viii. 14] or Pāṇini, v. 3, 117, referring to a Kṣatriya clan of that name in Southern India.

Keralaputra,<sup>1</sup> what is (known as) Tāmraparnī,<sup>2</sup> the Greek King, Antiochos, and those kings, too, who are the neighbours<sup>3</sup> of that Antiochos—everywhere have been instituted by His Sacred and Gracious Majesty two kinds of medical treatment<sup>4</sup>—medical treatment of man and medical treatment of beast. Medicinal herbs also, those wholesome for man and wholesome for beast, have been caused to be imported<sup>5</sup> and to be planted in all places wherever they did not exist.

Roots also, and fruits, have been caused to be imported and to be planted everywhere wherever they did not exist. On the roads, wells also have been caused to be dug and trees caused to be planted for the enjoyment of man and beast.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> I.e., Chera or Malabar. The ending putra denotes “the children of the soil.” The original Ketalapulo is a mistake for Keralaputra.

<sup>2</sup> In Kautilya’s Arthaśāstra it is a river in the Pāṇḍya country, according to the commentator Bhattasvāmī. But in the Pāli literature, it is the name of Ceylon, Tāmbapamniya in R.E. XIII also definitely denoting the people of Ceylon (as shown also by Monier Williams in his Dictionary). Besides, the ruler of a large empire cannot be expected to think of a petty boundary like a river in Tinnevely to indicate the peoples beyond his frontiers. Finally, Ceylon, to which his son gave its religion, must naturally figure prominently as the objective of his “moral conquests,” his humanitarian work. Ā Tāmbapamni of the text = yā Tāmraparnī.

<sup>3</sup> Named in R.E. XIII.

<sup>4</sup> Chikichha, chikitsā, medical treatment, which implies the provision of (a) physicians (including those for animals, veterinary surgeons), (b) medicines, and (c) places equipped for treatment, i.e., hospitals. Thus all the three—men, materials, and place—are conveyed by the term. The supply of medicines depended upon special botanical gardens for their cultivation, and pharmaceutical works for their manufacture.

<sup>5</sup> In the description of the palace of Chandragupta Maurya as given by Ælian [c. xviii.], there is a reference to trees “native to the soil” and others which are “with circumspect care brought from other parts.”

The evidence of the edict on Asoka’s supply of medical aid is echoed in the legends which trace the origin of this measure to the death of a monk for want of medicines, whereupon Asoka had four tanks filled with medicines at the four gates of the city, as related by Buddhaghosa [Samantapāsādikā, p. 306].

<sup>6</sup> Kautilya [II. 21] also encourages the import of seeds of useful and medicinal plants by exempting such import from tolls (mahopākāram-uchchhulkam kuryāt vijam tu durlabham).

III

[GIRNAR]

His Sacred and Gracious Majesty thus saith : By me consecrated twelve years <sup>1</sup> was the following ordained : Everywhere within my dominions, the Yuktas <sup>2</sup> the Rājūka <sup>3</sup> and

<sup>1</sup> Kautilya [II. 6] applies the term rājavarṣa to the year counted from the king's coronation.

<sup>2</sup> A general term for government employees. It is also found in the Arthaśāstra [II. 5]: "Sarvādhikaraṇeṣu Yuktopayuktatātpuruṣānām," e.g., "among the Yuktas, Upayuktas and their subordinates [puruṣas (a term occurring in P.E. I, IV and VII)] of all departments." Here the Yuktas must mean the subordinate secretariat staff accompanying the higher officials on tour [Thomas, JRAS, 1914, p. 391]. In II. 9, Kautilya refers to the Yuktas being employed in the collection of revenue which they may embezzle unnoticed. The terms āyuktaka and viniyuktaka frequently occur in the Gupta Inscriptions.

<sup>3</sup> Rājūke or raju (Manshera) is probably connected with the word Rājā which in Pāli might mean even a Mahāmatta, Mahāmātra, and "all those who have power of life and death" [Childers]. In the Mahāvamsa, there is even the term Rājako for a king. The functions of these Rājūkas are indicated in P.E. IV, where it is stated that they were in charge of "many hundred thousands of people" and are invested with some of the powers of the sovereign, viz., independence as regards daṇḍa, i.e., justice, and abhihāra, i.e., rewards (or attack), as well as anugraha, i.e., privileges and pardons. Thus the Rājūkas ranked next to the king and the viceroys, and were like the provincial governors.

Bühler thought that the word was connected with the word rajju and the same as the Pāli word rajjūka, ropeholder, and hence signifying "Revenue and Settlement Officer" [Ep. Ind. vol. ii. p. 466 n.]. Dr. F. W. Thomas agrees with Bühler in thinking that while the Rājūkas represented the highest local officials, their chief functions were connected with "survey, land settlement and irrigation" [Cambridge History, p. 487]. Megasthenes also speaks of high officers who "superintend the rivers, measure the land, inspect the sluices by which water is let out from the main canals into their branches, have charge of the huntsmen with power of rewarding or punishing them, collect the taxes and superintend the occupations connected with land."

The Kautiliya has the expression rajjūśchorarajjūścha [II. 6], of which the meaning is not clear. But in IV. 13, Kautilya the Prādeśika<sup>1</sup> must, every five years, go out on tour by turns<sup>2</sup> as well for other business too<sup>3</sup> as for this purpose, mentions an officer called chora-rajjuka, whose duty was probably to apprehend thieves. He was made liable to make good the loss by theft within his jurisdiction to traders who had declared to him the value of their goods. [The commentator explains chora-rajjuka = choragrahaṇa-niyukta.] But Jacobi has found in the Jaina work Kaṭṭhasūtra the word rajjū which he explains as "a writer, a clerk."

<sup>1</sup> These might be higher officers than the Rājūkas, if they are mentioned in an ascending order. Dr. F. W. Thomas identifies them with the Pradeśṭris who were in charge of "the executive, revenue and judicial service" [JRAS, 1914, pp. 383-6, and Cambridge History, pp. 488, 508]. The Pradeśṭri figures as the head of one of the traditional eighteen tirthas or departments of the state in the Kautiliya [I. 12]. The name signifies a distinct department or branch of public service. The Pradeśṭri is in charge of criminal administration and justice (Kaṇṭhaka-sodhana), as the Dharmastha was of civil justice [IV. 1]. Like the Dharmastha and, indeed, other Adhyakṣas, the Pradeśṭā was himself also subject to espionage under the direction of the Samāhartā [IV. 4]. He figures also as the chief officer of the police, with his own staff of Gopas and Sthānikas to assist him in tracking thieves from outside the province [IV. 6]. Like the Samāhartā, he is also to check the work of the Adhyakṣas and their subordinates (puruṣas) [IV. 9]. With the Dharmastha, again, he is empowered to make awards of penalties like fines and corporeal punishment [Ib.]. Lastly, he also helped the local administrations by inspecting the work, and the means employed for it, by their officers, the Sthānika and Gopa, and also by collecting the religious cesses [II. 35]. The Prādeśika in its literal sense would indicate the ruler of a pradeśa or local area, and is similar to the term Rāṣṭra-pāla used by Kautiliya [V. 1] or to the term Rāstriyena applied to the provincial governor in the Junāgaḍh Inscription of Rudradāman. Dr. Thomas [JRAS, 1915] also now proposes to derive the word from pradeśa in the sense of "report" [as in the Kautiliya, p. 111]. The term Prādeśikeśvara = provincial chief occurs in Rājataranginī, iv. 126.

In this connection we may note the following terms used in the Edicts to indicate local officials having independent charge: Nagara-vyāvahāraka-Mahāmātras ("set over thousands of souls," K.R.Ē. II), Lājavachanika-Mahāmātras [Ib.], Rājūkas, and Prādeśikas.

<sup>2</sup> Anusamyānaṃ niyātu (nikramatu, S., and nikhamāvū, D. and J.). See the note on the words occurring in K.R.E. I.

<sup>3</sup> Yathā añāya pi kaṃmāya: cf. "atane kaṃmam ahāpayitu etaṃ pi," "without neglecting their own duties, while on tour, in undertaking this new duty" [K.R.E. I]. This repetition con-

for this religious instruction : Commendable<sup>1</sup> is the service of father and mother<sup>2</sup> ; commendable is liberality to friends,<sup>3</sup> acquaintances, relatives, Brahmans and Śramaṇas ;<sup>4</sup> commendable is abstention from the slaughter of living creatures ;<sup>5</sup> commendable also is not to spend or hoard too much.<sup>6</sup> The Council<sup>7</sup> will also similarly instruct the Yuktas

clusively shows that ordinary administrative tour is meant by the term anusamyāna, and not the transfer of officials as suggested by some.

<sup>1</sup> Sādhū.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Sigālovāda Suttanta : " In five ways a child should minister to his parents (mātā-pitaro-pachchupaṭṭhātabbā) : ' Once supported by them I will now be their support (bhato nesaṃ bharissāmi) ; I will perform duties incumbent on them ; I will keep up the lineage and tradition (kula-vaṃsaṃ) of my family (i.e., by " not dissipating property, restoring, if need be, the family honour and integrity, and maintaining gifts to religious ") ; I will make myself worthy of my heritage (dāyavajjaṃ patipajjāmi).' " This is the full meaning of the expression " mātari cha pitari cha sūsrūṣā," as so often used in the Edicts.

<sup>3</sup> There are mentioned five ways in which these friends and companions (mittāmachchā) may be served [Ib.] ; viz., " by generosity (dānena), courtesy (peyyavajjena), benevolence (attha-chariyāya), by treating them as one treats himself (samānattatāya), and by being as good as his word (avisamvādanatāya)."

<sup>4</sup> " In five ways should one minister to the Samaṇas and Brāhmaṇas : by friendliness (mettena) in act, speech, and mind, by keeping an open house for them (anāvaṭa-dvārātāya), and by supplying their temporal needs (āmisānuppadānena) " [Ib.].

According to Kauṭilya [II. 1], the royal liberality to a Brāhmaṇa, whether a ṛitvik, an āchārya, a purohita, or a śrotriya, should take the form of the gift to him of tax-free lands.

<sup>5</sup> Prāṇānaṃ sādhu anārambho'.

The Sigālovāda Suttanta includes as one of the four vices (kamma kilesā) pāṇatipāto or destruction of life.

<sup>6</sup> Apavyayatā apabhādatā ; this moderation in spending or hoarding is thus defined [Ib.] :

" One portion let him spend and taste the fruit.

His business to conduct let him take two

And portion four let him reserve and hoard (nidhāpeyya),

So there'll be wherewithal in times of need."

<sup>7</sup> Parisā, interpreted by Mr. K. P. Jayaswal as the Mantri-pariṣad as described in the Kauṭīliya, Bk. I. ch. 15.

for purposes of accounts <sup>1</sup> in accordance with my order <sup>2</sup> and its grounds.

IV

[GIRNAR]

For a long period past, for many hundreds of years, have increased the sacrificial slaughter of animals, cruelty towards living beings and improper treatment of relatives, of Brahmans and Śramaṇas. But to-day, in consequence of the practice of morality <sup>3</sup> by His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King, the sound of the war drum has become <sup>4</sup> the call (not to arms but) to Dharma, exhibiting <sup>5</sup> to the people <sup>6</sup> the sight of the cars of the gods, of elephants,<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Gaṇanāyam, gaṇanasi, which I take in the ordinary sense and not in the technical sense of the Department of Accounts (as taken in V. Smith's Asoka). Hultzsch takes it to mean "for registering (these rules)."

The gaṇanā, as has been very aptly suggested by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar [Asoka, p. 280], might refer to the accounts of each household which should be examined by the yuktas to see how far they conformed to the principle of moderation in both spending and saving (apavyayatā apabhāṇdatā) laid down by the emperor.

We may also refer in this connection to the principle of Public Finance laid down by Kauṭilya [II. 6], which requires the Collector-General, Samāhartā, to see to the increase of revenue by taxation and decrease of expenditure by checking the spending authorities and by retrenchments. Perhaps Asoka had some such principle in view in this passage in his edict.

<sup>2</sup> Vyaṁjanato.

<sup>3</sup> Dhammacharaṇena.

<sup>4</sup> Aho = abhavat, became.

<sup>5</sup> Draśayitu (S.), draśeti (M.), dasayitpā (G.), dasayitu (K.).

<sup>6</sup> Janam ; janasa and munisānam in other texts.

<sup>7</sup> Hastidasanā ; other texts have hathini or astina. The elephants may be actual elephants in procession (instead of those for war) or figures of celestial elephants, the vehicles of the Lokapālas, or the white elephant symbolising the Buddha (suggested by Dr. Bhandarkar and Hultzsch).

Instead of the sights of the war chariots, war elephants, and destructive fires, Asoka was presenting to his people the edifying sights of the chariots of the gods, divine elephants, and radiant shapes of celestial beings, or inoffensive bonfires.

masses of fire<sup>1</sup> and other heavenly shows.<sup>2</sup>

As were not seen before for many hundreds of years, so now have increased through the religious ordinances of His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the king cessation of slaughter of animals, non-violence towards living beings, proper treatment of relatives, of Brahmans and Śramaṇas, obedience<sup>3</sup> to mother and father and to the seniors.<sup>4</sup>

This and other practice of morality of many kinds has been increased. And His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the king will further increase this practice of morality.

And the sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons,<sup>5</sup> too, of His <sup>1</sup> Agikhamdhāni; Shahbazgarhi has jotikamdhani; translated as bonfires, fireworks or illuminations, or "fiery" balls and other signs in the heavens. Hultzsch [J.R.A.S., 1913, p. 652] quotes mahanā aggikkhandhā to signify the guardians of the quarters, Indra and Brahma, appearing as "great masses of fire." In that case, the word in the edict would refer to radiant figures of the gods—divyāni rūpāni. Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar, however, interprets the passage in the light of the Vimānavatthu which describes the bliss of Svarga awaiting a virtuous man after death as comprising (1) the vimāna, a movable palace, (2) the hastī, all-white celestial elephant, (3) shining complexion, resembling star, fire, or lightning. These blisses were objectively presented before the people as stimulus to virtuous life.

<sup>2</sup> Divyāni rūpāni: Asoka's idea seems to have been that by seeing these exhibitions about the gods, the people might try to be like the gods, as indicated in M.R.E. I (amisā samānā munisā misā devehi).

<sup>3</sup> Susrusā: Mr. and Mrs. Rhys Davids do not approve of Childers' translation of the word as "obedience." They point out that "obedience does not occur in Buddhist ethics. It is not mentioned in any one of the 227 rules of the Buddhist order. It does not occur in any one of the clauses of this summary of the ethics of the Buddhist layman (viz., the Sigālovāda Suttanta), and it does not enter into any of the divisions of the Eightfold Path nor of the 37 constituent qualities of Arahantship. Hence no member of the Buddhist order takes any vow of obedience; and the vows of a Buddhist layman ignore it. Has this been one of the reasons for the success of Buddhism? It looked beyond obedience" [Dialogues of the Buddha, part 3, p. 181, n. 4]. They translate the word by "eagerness to learn," which is specially appropriate for the word used in reference to teachers in P.E. VII.

<sup>4</sup> Thaira = sthavira; or vuḍḍhanam, i.e., vriddhānām in other texts.

<sup>5</sup> Potrā (or nati) cha prapotrā (or pranatika); it is an interesting question whether Asoka lived to see his prapautra.

Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King will increase this practice of morality up to the end of time ("the aeon of universal destruction")<sup>1</sup> and will preach the Dharma, themselves abiding in<sup>2</sup> Dharma and righteous conduct. For this is the highest work, viz., preaching of the Dharma.

The practice of morality, too, is not of one devoid of virtue. The increase of this work, nay, even its non-diminution, is laudable. For this purpose has this been inscribed<sup>3</sup> that they (i.e., Asoka's successors) may apply themselves to the promotion of this object, and that its decline should not be entertained.

By His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King consecrated twelve years<sup>4</sup> was this caused to be inscribed.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Āva savaṭakapā = yāvat samvartakalpam. The Mahābhārata refers to the samvartaka fire of destruction, appearing at the end of 1000 yugas [see V. A. Smith's Asoka, 3rd ed. p. 167]. Other texts read āva kapam = yāvat kalpam.

<sup>2</sup> Tisṭamto.

<sup>3</sup> Lekhāpitam; S. has nipistam as read by Hultzsch. Bühler read it as dipista.

<sup>4</sup> Both this edict and the previous one state that they were issued in 258 B.C., while the next edict states it was issued a year later, when the Dharma-Mahāmātras were appointed. Thus the entire body of the fourteen Rock Edicts took a year, 258-257 B.C., for their publication on their own showing.

<sup>5</sup> Lekhāpitam or lekhitā (K.), but Shah. has dipapitam, and in R.E. V has the form dhramadipi dipista in place of dharmalipi lekhitā of K.

Pāṇini [iii. 2, 21] uses the forms lipikara and libikara for the scribe, and we have also in Sanskrit the word dibira for lipikara. Thus dipapitam or dipista is from root dipa or diba, to write. Hultzsch reads nipista for dipista, which Mr. K. P. Jayaswal would take to be nivīṣṭha, i.e., filed, or recorded, from the word nivī = a cord for tying. [Cf. the word nibandha; the word nibaddha for "registered" is used in a Nasik Inscription (see my Local Government in Ancient India, 2nd ed. p. 119).] But the word nivī in Sanskrit more usually means a piece of cloth wrapped round the waist, and as money was generally carried in such cloth (the old images of Kubera show bags of cloth hanging from his neck!) the word came to signify the money thus carried, one's capital or saving. The word is used in this sense by Kautilya [II. 6 and 7] and also in the significant expression, akṣaya-nivī, used in several inscriptions to distinguish the capital or principal to remain untouched from the interest yielded by it to be utilised [cf. my Local Govt., p. 116 n.]. [I owe this note to that of Rai Bahadur

V

[MĀNSEHRĀ]

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King : The good deed <sup>1</sup> is difficult of performance. He who is the first performer <sup>2</sup> of a good deed achieves something difficult of performance. Now by me many a good deed has been achieved.

Therefore should my sons, grandsons, and my descendants after them <sup>3</sup> up to the end of time follow in my footsteps, they will do really meritorious deeds. But he who in this matter will cause even a portion <sup>4</sup> to diminish <sup>5</sup> will perform an evil deed indeed. Sin must be trodden down.<sup>6</sup>

Now in times past the Dharma-Mahāmātrās were non-existent previously. But now the Dharma-Mahāmātrās have been created by me consecrated for thirteen years. They have been employed among all sects for the establishment and growth of Dharma and for the good and happiness

G. H. Ojhā in his valuable Hindi edition of Asoka's Edicts (p. 52 n.) [Hultzsch [JRAS, 1913, p. 634] takes nīpista, however, to be niṣpiṣṭa (stamped ground), and hence "engraved." He now thinks [Corpus, p. xlii.] that the word should be connected with the ancient Persian nīpish, to write, and quotes the inscription of Xerxes at Van—" yanaiy dipim naiy nīpishlām," "where Darius did not cause an inscription to be written."

Instead of idaṃ lekhāpitam, S., according to Hultzsch, reads ñanam hida nīpesitam which he translates thus : " (This) conception (jñāna) was caused to be written here."

<sup>1</sup> Kalaṇam, kayāne (K.) = kalyāṇam.

<sup>2</sup> Adikare = ādikarah, i.e., originator.

<sup>3</sup> The manner of the statement seems to indicate that Asoka had lived to see his grandsons and no later descendants [cf. the dedications naming Devānartha Devānampiya].

<sup>4</sup> Deśa : the word also occurs in Kalinga R.E. I (se pi deśam no savam). Cf. ekadeśam, a part.

<sup>5</sup> Hapeṣati = hāpayiṣyati ; cf. hini = hāniḥ in R.E. IV.

<sup>6</sup> Supadarave or supadālaye (K.) = supradalitavya, i.e., to be trampled on foot, to be destroyed. The Shahbazgarhi version, as well as Girnar, uses the word sukaram, in which case the sense of the passage will be : "sin is indeed easily committed."

of those devoted to religion <sup>1</sup> (even) among the Yonas,<sup>2</sup> Kambojas, Gandhāras,<sup>3</sup> Rāṣṭrikas,<sup>4</sup> Pitinikas<sup>5</sup> and whatever other peoples of Aparānta<sup>6</sup> or western borderers (of mine

<sup>1</sup> Dharmayutasa : I take the meaning of the word as intended clearly in the Maski Edict and not in the accepted sense of " subordinate officials of the Law of Piety."

<sup>2</sup> The Yonas are to be distinguished from the " Yona-rājās " of R.E. II and XIII. According to Senart, these peoples who are termed Āparāntas are somewhat different in status from the peoples called Āntas : the former are more closely related to the king through the Dharma-Mahāmātras he deposes for work among them ; the Āntas [R.E. II], on the contrary, receive a different kind of benefit from the king—viz., supply of medical aid. To this category would belong all the foreign peoples under the Greek kings named. In R.E. II the word anta alternates with the word pratyanta in the different versions.

<sup>3</sup> Hultsch [Arch. S., S. I., i. 223] takes them to be " Greeks, Kabulis, and N.W. Panjabis."

<sup>4</sup> The terms Mahā-rathis and Mahā-bhojas occur in some inscriptions of the Āndhra or Sātavāhana period in the Deccan to indicate feudatory chiefs, while the word petenika is explained as " hereditary " by the commentator on Āṅguttara, iii. 70, and 300, where occurs the expression Raṭṭhika Pettanika. This is the suggestion of Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar who would interpret Pitinika-Rāṣṭrikas or Bhojas [R.E. XIII] as hereditary chieftains. The equation Petenika = Pettanika is, however, rejected by Michelson as " defying known phonetic shifts." He thinks Petenika can be derived only from Paitrayanika [J.AOS, 46. 257]. Hultsch takes Rāṣṭrika = Arattas of the Panjab = Arattioi of the Periplus.

Hultsch [Corpus, p. xxxviii.] further suggests that the Rathikas or Rāṣṭrikas might refer to the people of Kathiāvār, from the fact that its governor is given the title of Rāṣṭriya in the Junāgarh Inscription of Rudradāman.

<sup>5</sup> Raṭhika-Pitinikana ; Raṭhikanam Pitinikanam (S.), Riṣṭika-Petenikānam (G.), Laṭhika-Pitenikesu (Dhauḷi).

In R.E. XIII we have the compound Bhoja-Pitinikeṣu or Pitiniyeṣu.

<sup>6</sup> The term Aparānta in Sanskrit literature seems to be a stock word for Western India. The Purāṇas for instance, call the five Divisions of India as (1) Madhyadeśa (central), (2) Udichya (north), (3) Prāchya (east), (4) Dakṣiṇāpatha (south), and (5) Aparānta (west). The five divisions are thus described in the Kāvyamīmāṃsā : (1). Pūrvadeśa, eastern country, from Vārāṇasī, (2) Dakṣiṇāpatha, stretching southwards from Māhiṣmatī, (3) Uttarāpatha, north of Prithūdaka (= Pehoa, west of Thanesar), (4) Antardeśa, middle there are). They are also employed among the soldiers and their chiefs,<sup>1</sup> Brahmanical ascetics<sup>2</sup> and householders, the country, defined as the land between Vinasāna and Prayāga, Gaṅgā and Yamunā, and (5) Paścātdeśa, western country, the Aparānta of the Purāṇas, which is defined as comprising the following sub-divisions, viz., Devasabhā, Surāṣṭra, Daśeraka (Malwa), Travaṇa, Bhṛigukachchha, Kachchhiya, Ānarta (Gujarat), Arbuda (round Mount Abu), Yavana and others. Thus the peoples named by Asoka would come well within Aparānta. The Aparānta is also one of the regions to which the third Buddhist Council despatched a missionary, as stated in the text. The capital of Aparānta was Sūrpāraka in Pāli works, which is modern Sopārā in Thana District, where occurs a version of the Rock Edicts. Jayaswal, however, takes the word Aparānta as an antithesis to Anta, and interprets the two words as meaning peoples within and outside the limits of Asoka's empire respectively. See note under R.E. XIII. It may also be noted that Kautilya also uses the word Aparānta for Western India, and refers to this region as being known for its elephants though only of middle quality [II. 2], and for its excessive rainfall, whence the commentator identifies it with Konkan [II. 24].

<sup>1</sup> Bhaṭamayeṣu = bhṛta-m (euphonic) -āryeṣu; bhaṭa (=a soldier) is not the same word as bhaṭaka (=a servant) in the expression dāsa-bhaṭakasi, "in slaves and servants," occurring in R.E. IX. The expression Bhaṭa-chāḷa (regular and irregular troops) frequently occurs in the Gupta Inscriptions.

<sup>2</sup> Bramaṇibhyeṣu: the Brahmins are here contrasted with those who are called ibhyas, i.e., persons possessed of wealth and family, and hence householders, as distinguished from ascetics. P.E. VII, l. 15, in the same context has the expression pavajitānam gihīhānam, "ascetics and householders." The other juxtaposition, Brāhmaṇa-Śramaṇeṣu occurring in other edicts (e.g., R.E. IV), also shows that the term Brāhmaṇa does not denote the caste, but the Brahmanical orders of ascetics, as the term Śramaṇa denotes the other orders of ascetics. There were in that age numerous sects of Brahmanical ascetics designated as Tīthiyas, Ājīvikas, Nigaṇṭhas, Muṇḍasāvakas, Jaṭīlakas, Paribbājakas, Māgaṇḍikas, Tedaṇḍikas, Eka-Sātakas, Aviruddhakas, Gotamakās, Devadhammikas, Charakas, Āchelakas, etc. [see JRAS, 1898, p. 197, and Sutta Nipāta], while the Śramaṇa ascetics were also of different varieties known as Magga-jinas, Magga-desins, Magga-jivins, and Magga-dusins, disputes among whom split them into more sects. Thus the term Brāhmaṇa-Śramaṇa would bring under it all classes of ascetics in that age, manifold as they were. The respect for Brahman and Śramaṇa ascetics is not Asoka's innovation: it is as old as the Buddha, who was full of it. As the passage already cited shows [Digha Nikāya, iii. p. 191, P.T.S.], the Buddha points to "Samana-Brāhmaṇā" as objects of highest destitute, and the infirm by age, for the good and happiness, and freedom from molestation, of those <sup>1</sup> who have applied themselves to Dharma. They are also employed for taking steps against <sup>2</sup> imprisonment, <sup>3</sup> for freedom from molestation, respect to be shown in five ways, viz., by friendliness of action, speech and thought, keeping open door for them (anāvaṭa-dvāratāya), and by supply of needs (āmisānuppadānena). Thus Asoka's insistence on respect for Brahman ascetics is due to his Buddhism, and its traditions in that regard.

It may be noted that Megasthenes also had noticed two classes of ascetics he calls "Brachmanes and Sarmanes." The former lived in simple style, using beds of rushes or skins, abstaining from animal food, always studying and discoursing up to the age of 37, when they returned to the world. Thus these must have been the Brāhma-chārī Brāhmaṇas. But Arrian noticed other classes of ascetics whom he calls Sophists, who "go naked, living in the open air under trees, and eating only fruits and barks of trees." These must have been the Brāhmaṇas of the fourth āśrama, i.e., those who renounced the world and became Sannyāsīs. The other class of ascetics whom the Greek writers call Sarmanes, i.e., Śramaṇas, "lived in the woods, subsisting on leaves and fruits, and wearing barks of trees."

<sup>1</sup> Apalibodhaye, but the Girnar text reads aparigodhāya. Dr. Thomas, in a long and learned article [JRAS, 1915, pp. 99-106], has shown the meanings of both the words, paligodha and palibodha, from their uses in different texts. From root grīdh, we get parigrīddha used in the sense of "desire," "greed" or "worldliness" in several passages in the Śikṣā-samuchchaya and also in the Divy-āvadāna (p. 351: parigrīddho viṣayābhirataścha). The word palibodha is derived from root budh, "to be aware," but its various uses in the Vinaya, the Jātakas, and other texts, show that its established meaning is "anxiety," "trouble," or "worldly cares." These fine shades of difference in the meanings of the two words were lost in popular usage, and the inditer of the edict may be pardoned if he has missed them.

It may be noted in connection with these duties of the Dharma-Mahāmātrās to give state help to the destitute and the infirm by age (anātheṣu vṛiddheṣu), that Kautilya also recognised the same duty of the state: "Bāla-vṛiddha-vyādhita-vyasanya-anāthāścha rājā bibhṛiyāt," "the king shall maintain the orphan, decrepit, diseased, afflicted and destitute (II. 1)."

<sup>2</sup> Paṭivīdhanaye; paṭivīdhānāya (G.): Sanskrit prativīdhānam = precautionary or remedial step. Hultsch, however, takes it in the sense of a gift, in which sense the word is used in R.E. VIII, and explains it as "in supporting."

<sup>3</sup> Badhana-badhasa; baṁdhana-badhasa (G.), "of one bound in chains." Cf. baṁdhana-badhānam in P.E. IV.

and for granting release, on the ground that one has numerous offspring <sup>1</sup> or is overwhelmed by misfortune <sup>2</sup> or afflicted by age. Here, <sup>3</sup> and in all the outlying towns, in all the harems <sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Pajāva ti vā in K. settles the meaning of the expression; = "prajāvān iti vā"; one who is encumbered with too many children and is thus deserving of clemency. As regards these anubandhas or grounds for relief, Jayaswal was the first to explain them in the light of Smṛiti texts [Manu, viii. 126; Gautama, xii. 51; Vasiṣṭha, xix. 91; Yājñavalkya, i. 367; and Kauṭilya, IV. 85; cited in JBORS, IV. pp. 144-46] referring to the various grounds for revision of judicial sentences.

<sup>2</sup> Kartabhikara or, according to Hultzsck, Katrabhikara; Kiṭa-bhikaro (S.); Kaṭābhikāle (K.); nom. sing. m.; "one overwhelmed by misfortune," as explained by Bühler on the use of the word abhikirati in the sense of "oppresses, overpowers" in Jāt. iv. 125, v. 72. Abhikāra, according to Woolner, may also mean (1) charm, incantation, in which sense it is taken by Senart and Hultzsck who explain kaṭābhikāle as "victims of a trick," and "bewitched" respectively; (2) means of livelihood, and hence kaṭābhikāle = the bread-winner [citing Deśināmamālā, i. 2].

On the whole subject of the unjust imprisonment (bandhana), execution (vadha), and torture (palibodha) of prisoners, it is interesting to note that Kautilya [IV. 8] also warns the Superintendent of Jails against these. He is liable to fines for confining persons in lock-up without declaring the reason (saṃruddhahakamanākhyāya chārayataḥ); for putting them to unjust torture (karmakārayataḥ); for denying them food and drink; for molesting them (parikleśayataḥ); and for causing their death (ghnatāḥ). Thus the work of Asoka's Dharma-Mahāmātras in respect of these matters lay with the superintendents of different jails in his empire, who were responsible for much unjust suffering for the people.

<sup>3</sup> The Girnar text reads here "Pāṭalipute," i.e., "at Pāṭaliputra," which settles the meaning of the word, wherever it occurs in the edicts [e.g., R.E. I]. Pāṭaliputra is also mentioned in the Sarnath Pillar Edict. As regards residence of members of the royal family in the provincial towns, we may mention those where the princes lived as viceroys, viz., Taxila, Ujjain, Tosali, Suvarṇagiri. Kautilya also speaks of Mahāmātras being appointed in charge of the royal places of pleasure (vihāra), both in the capital and outside (vāhyā-bhyantara) [I. 10].

<sup>4</sup> The Dhauili text reads: "hida cha bāhilesu cha nagalesu savesu s[a]vesu olodhanes[u] [me] e vā pi bhāt[i]naṃ me bhagininaṃ va. . . ." The expression "me olodhanesu," "my harems," does not occur in the other readings. This shows that Asoka had his own harems in the Mufussil towns, and in this connection we may instance the case of his wife, Devī of Vedisagiri, who, according to the Ceylon of my brothers and sisters<sup>1</sup> and whatever other relatives (of mine there are), everywhere are they employed. These Dharma-Mahāmātras are employed among those devoted to Dharma in all places within my dominions,<sup>2</sup> whether one is eager for Dharma or established in Dharma or properly devoted to charity.<sup>3</sup>

For this purpose has this religious edict been inscribed that it may be everlasting and that my descendants<sup>4</sup> may follow in this path.

VI

[GIRNAR]

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King :
In times past, there was not before at all hours<sup>5</sup> discharge legends, permanently resided there, instead of coming to Pātaliputra to live there with her royal husband and children. Similarly, a second avarodhana or harem of Asoka must have been maintained for his second queen, Kāruvākī, the mother of Prince Tivara, at the city of Kauśāmbī, as will appear from her edict inscribed on the Allahabad Pillar, which was originally located at Kauśāmbī. As regards the harems of his brothers, they were, as already explained, at the four cities where the brothers were posted as Asoka's viceroys.

The nature of the work of these Dharma-Mahāmātras in the royal harems is indicated in P.E. VII, viz., to stimulate their inmates to morality and gifts.

<sup>1</sup> Spasuna.

<sup>2</sup> Vijitasi or vijite, also used in R.E. II and III; but the Dhauli text uses the significant word puṭhaviyam, i.e., prithivyām, signifying the extent of his dominions. That his empire was extensive is also stated by Asoka in another place—Mahālake (or mahante) hi vijitam [R.E. XIV].

<sup>3</sup> “Dhramaniṣito to va dhramadhithane ti va danasamyute,” of which I take the translation of Hultzsch.

<sup>4</sup> Praja = sons or descendants in this edict, as also in the two Kalinga Edicts; not subjects, as translated by V. Smith.

<sup>5</sup> This statement is not in keeping with the heavy programme of daily duties and engagements to which the king is required to attend in all Nīti-Śāstras [Kauṭilya, I. 19; Manu, vii. 145, 146, 222-226; Yājñavalkya, vii. 327-333; Agni-Purāṇa, ccxxv. 1-17]. Asoka's stricture against his predecessors does not apply even to his grandfather whose devotion to public work is thus described by Megasthenes: “The king may not sleep during the daytime. He leaves his of administrative business or the receiving of reports. So by me has thus been arranged : at all hours, when I am eating,<sup>1</sup> or in the harem, or in the inner apartments,<sup>2</sup> or even in the ranches,<sup>3</sup> or in the place of religious instruction,<sup>4</sup> palace not only in time of war, but also for the purpose of judging causes. He then remains in Court for the whole day without allowing the business to be interrupted, even though the hour arrives when he must needs attend to his person " [McCrindle, p. 72]. Curtius [viii. 9] also adds : " The palace is open to all comers, even when the king is having his hair combed and dressed. It is then that he gives audience to ambassadors and administers justice to his subjects." [Ib., Ancient India, p. 58 n.].

<sup>1</sup> Bhumjāmānasa, adamānasā (Kalsi), aśamanasa (Shah.), and aśatasa (Man.).

<sup>2</sup> Orodhanamhi, but the Kalinga texts have "amte olodhanasi," "within the harem."

<sup>3</sup> Vachamhi, vachasi, or vrachaspi, connected by the Prakrit grammarian Hemachandra with Sanskrit vraja = enclosure for cattle and herdsmen. Kautilya [II. 6] includes in a vraja the following animals : cows, buffaloes, goats, sheep, asses, camels, horses, and mules. He also makes attending to the business of his cattle the king's personal work [I. 19]. Michelson [JAOS, 46. 259] points out the phonetic difficulty of deriving vacha from vraja, and of explaining the change of ja to cha in Girnar. But Girnar has vacha-bhūmikhā in R.E. XII which is evidently vraja-bhumikhā. Shah. has the forms vracheyam (in this edict), vracha-bhumika [R.E. XII] and vrachamti [R.E. XIII], all connected with vraja.

<sup>4</sup> Vinītamhi, vinītasi. I adopt the meaning of Senart, in accordance with the idea that all these words single out the different places with which are associated the different functions of his domestic and private life, viz., eating, sleeping, company of females, walking about in the gardens (udyanēṣu) or his farm, and last, but not least important, for Asoka, his religious exercise. In this edict, Asoka declares that public work has, however, the right to encroach upon the domain of his private life, and can pursue him even into his home, and leisure and privacy. Some scholars [Vidhuśekhara (IA, xlix. 53) and Ojha] take vraja to mean a short journey, and vinīta, a long one, involving a succession of conveyances and relays of horses, paramparāvāhana, as Amarakoṣa puts it. Prof. Vidhuśekhara cites an apt passage from the Rathavinīta Sutta of Majjhima Nikāya where it is stated that for King Pasenadi's journey on urgent business from Sāvatti to Sāketa, seven ratha-vinītas [lit., "the chariots to which are yoked the horses that are well trained and of good race" (Buddhaghosa)], i.e., seven changes of horses (and perhaps of vehicles too) were arranged for. It may be noted that Kautilya [II. 33] or in the parks,<sup>1</sup> everywhere, Prativedakas<sup>2</sup> are posted<sup>3</sup> with instructions to report on the affairs of my people. In mentions a class of chariots called vainayika or training chariots. I still adhere to my own meaning which is supported by Kautilya's statement of the king's duties which included svādhyāya (religious study), evening prayers (sandhyāmuṣṣita), and receiving benedictions from preceptors, etc., and solitary meditation (śāstramiti kartavyatām chintayet), for which the Vinīta, the place for such religious duties, was necessary. Kautilya and the edict agree in other points, too, e.g., orodhane of the edict corresponding to śayita of Kautilya; bhumjāmānasa to snānabhojana; uyānesu to svairavihāra; and vraja, which is implied in the king's inspection of his horses, elephants, chariots and infantry (hastyaśvarathāyudhiyān paśyet). Corresponding to Vinīta, Kautilya also refers to the Upas-thāna (sanctuary) and Agnyāgāra (room of sacred fire), where the king with his preceptors would deal with religious and other matters [Kautilya, I. 19]. Instead of "Svādhyāya," or worship of Agni, Asoka would study Vinaya in his Vinīta!

<sup>1</sup> That the Mauryan palace at Pāṭaliputra was set in a beautiful park is recorded by Ælian [xiii. 18, McCrindle]: "In the parks, tame pea-cocks are kept, domesticated pheasants. There are shady groves and pasture grounds planted with trees, some of them ever in bloom, and while some are native to the soil, others are with circumspect care brought from other parts, and with their beauty enhance the charms of the landscape. Parrots keep hovering about the king and wheeling round him. Within the palace grounds there are also artificial ponds of great beauty in which they keep fish of enormous size but quite tame, providing sport for the king's sons who also try boating on the water."

The Udyāna of the edict probably corresponds to the Mriga-vana which Kautilya [II. 3] provides for the king's pleasure. This game forest, protected by a surrounding ditch, and equipped with delicious fruit trees, bushes, bowers, and thornless trees, was rendered more secure and entertaining for the king by admitting into it all wild animals—tigers, elephants, bisons, and the like—with their powers for mischief, their claws and teeth, cut off.

<sup>2</sup> The sixth among the seven castes mentioned by Megasthenes who calls them "overseers or inspectors." "It is their province to enquire into and superintend all that goes on in India, and make report to the king" [Megasthenes, p. 43]. Arrian adds that "it is against use and wont for these to give in a false report, but, indeed, no Indian is accused of lying." Strabo also states: "The best and most trustworthy men are appointed to fill these offices" [McCrindle, p. 53]. This confirms the statement of Kautilya [I. 11] that they should be recruited from the highest ranks of civil service (amātya) and be men tried and tested. Kautilya calls them Gūdhapuruṣas all places do I dispose of the affairs of the people. And if perchance by word of mouth I personally command a donation<sup>4</sup> or a proclamation;<sup>5</sup> or again, if an urgent matter has been assigned to the Mahāmātras<sup>6</sup> and if in connection therewith a debate or deliberation<sup>7</sup> takes making up the Intelligence Department of Government. The Department had a stationary (saṁsthā) as well as a travelling (sañchāra) branch [I. 11-13].

The Prādesikas of R.E. III may be the same as the Praṭivedakas, if we derive the word with Thomas [JRAS, 1915, p. 112] from Pradeśa = not a district, but a "report," in which sense it is used, for instance, by Kautilya [p. 111], "tena pradeśena rājā . . upadiśet" [cf. also etinā cha vāyajanenā of M.R.E. I (R.) and M.P.E. (Sarnath)].

<sup>3</sup> Stitā.

<sup>4</sup> Dāpakam: e.g., Asoka's inscriptions recording his grant of cave dwellings to the Ājivikas.

<sup>5</sup> Srāvāpakam, e.g., the edicts (cf. śrāvāpītam, śrāvāṇam of M.R.E. I). Ojha suggests that the two words might mean the officers connected with the royal benefactions (the Almoners), and with the proclamation of the royal messages. Kautilya [II. 7] also mentions an officer called Dāpaka who fixes and collects the amount of taxes to be paid by the dāyaka or tax-payer. It may also be noted that some of the Gupta Inscriptions mention an officer called Ājñā-dāpaka, and Asoka might have had such an officer in view to receive his orders from his mouth (mukhato āñāpayāmi svayam dāpakam vā srāvāpakam). Srāvāpakam might then mean Ājñā-srāvāpakam, the officer to proclaim the king's orders.

<sup>6</sup> The clause is repeated by a mistake in the Shāhbāzgarhi text—one of the few clerical errors of the edicts.

<sup>7</sup> Nijhātī; Sanskrit nidhyānam; variously interpreted as "meditation, reconsideration, amendment, adjournment, and appeal." There is a reference here to the king's oral orders as distinguished from his more usual written orders. Jayaswal [Hindu Polity, II. 141] cites a passage from the Sukranītisāra showing that the oral orders of a king were not binding on his pariṣat or council, whence there arises in the council a vivāda or a nijhātī, which may even mean a reversal of the king's oral order. The passage in the Sukranīti is: "Alekhyamājñāpayati hyalekhyam yat karoti yaḥ | rājā kṛtyamubhau chorau tau bhṛitya-nṛpatī sadā; a king who orders any business without writing, and an officer executing it, are both thieves in Law" [II. 291].

Dr. B. M. Barua cites a passage from the commentary on the Kosambika Sutta of Majjhima-Nikāya in which nijhātī or nijjhāpanam is defined as "atthañ cha kāraṇaṇ cha dassetvā aññamaññañ jānāpanam," i.e., as coming to an agreement after considering the place<sup>1</sup> in the Parisat,<sup>2</sup> then without a moment's interval should it be reported<sup>3</sup> to me in all places, at all hours.

Thus has been ordered by me.

For there is no satisfaction of mine in exertion<sup>4</sup> and despatch of business. My highest duty is, indeed, the promotion of the good of all. Of that, again, the root is facts and reasons; and another passage from the Anguttara, Part I, "Parisā-vagga," p. 66, where saññatti is used almost as a synonym for nijjhatti. In the Manoratha-Pūraṇi [Anguttara—Commentary], saññatti is explained as "making the matter known" (saññāpentīti jānāpentī) and nijjhatti as "getting the matter examined" (nijjhāpentī pekkhāpentī) [Asoka Edicts in New Light, pp. 78, 79].

<sup>1</sup> Samto; saṃtaṃ (K.), saṃta (M.), sataṃ (S.). See note on the word in P.E. IV.

<sup>2</sup> Also used in R.E. III in the same sense. Entrusting urgent matters to ministers, attending to them promptly, and summoning the Parīṣad or Council for the purpose, are all mentioned by Kautilya as the duties of the king. "Summoning the ministers and their council (mantri-parīṣadam), the king shall speak to them on urgent matters (ātyayike kārye = atīyāyike or āchāyike of the Edict)"; "all urgent matter should the king attend to, but never put off; when postponed it will be difficult or impossible of achievement (Sarvamātyayikam kāryam śrinuyānnātīpātayet)" [Kautilya, I. 15 and 19].

It is interesting to note that Kautilya [Ib.] has even defined the classes of business to which the king must personally attend, and the order in which he should attend to such business in accordance with its importance or urgency (ātyayikavaśena), viz., that concerning (1) religion, (2) ascetics, (3) different sects, (4) learned Brāhmaṇas, (5) cattle, (6) sacred places, (7) orphans, (8) the helpless by age, disease or misfortune, (9) the destitute, and (10) women.

Among the king's duties, Kautilya also mentions (a) activity (utthānam), (b) performance of religious rites (yajñāḥ), (c) administration, (d) liberality (dakṣinā), (e) impartial justice (vr̥tti-sāmyam).

<sup>3</sup> According to Kautilya [I. 15, 19], the king usually consulted his council of ministers by means of correspondence (mantra-parīṣadā patrasaṃpreṣaṇena mantrayeta). It was only on urgent matters that they were summoned to his presence. At such meetings of the council, the opinion of the majority was accepted by the king (tatra yad-bhūyīṣṭhāḥ brūyuh tat kuryāt). The meeting-place of the council is called by Kautilya [I. 20] mantra-bhūmi.

<sup>4</sup> Uśānamhi: Kautilya [I. 19] uses the same word uttiṣṭhamānam or utthānam in almost the same context, pointing out the need of a king to be always active and energetic. The whole passage is indeed an echo of Kautilya: "In the happiness of his subjects lies the king's this: exertion and despatch of business.<sup>1</sup> There is no higher work than the promotion of the commonweal. And if I am at all making any exertion, it is in order that I may obtain the discharge of debt to all living beings,<sup>2</sup> and make them<sup>3</sup> happy in this world, while they may attain heaven in the world beyond. Now, for this purpose is this religious edict inscribed that it may last for ever, and that my sons,<sup>4</sup> and grandsons, and great-grandsons may follow<sup>5</sup> it for the good of all. But this is difficult of achievement except by great<sup>6</sup> and sustained effort.<sup>7</sup>

VII

[SHAHBAZGARHI]

His Sacred and Gracious Majesty desires that in all places should reside<sup>8</sup> people of diverse sects.

happiness, in their good his good; the satisfaction of his subjects, and not his own, he should seek."

<sup>1</sup> An exact echo, almost a literal translation, of Kautilya [Ib.]: arthasya mūlamutthānam—"the root (of success in government) is to be up and doing."

<sup>2</sup> Asoka adds a fourth debt for the king, over and above the three debts to the fathers, gods and ṛṣis—according to the Śāstras.

<sup>3</sup> Nāni and kāni in some texts from Sans. ena, and ṣe in other texts from eṣa.

<sup>4</sup> The Kalsi text reads putadāle, with which may be compared the word dālakā for the king's sons used in P.E. VII.

<sup>5</sup> Anuvataran; cf. anuvatat in R.E. V. Other texts use the word parakramamtu, and its correspondents i.e., may exert themselves [cf. M.R.E. I.].

<sup>6</sup> Agana.

<sup>7</sup> The Dhauli text adds an isolated word seto at the end. The word may mean śveta, i.e., white, with which may be compared the isolated sentence at the end of R.E. XIII in the Girnar version.

<sup>8</sup> This is apparently against Kautilya's injunction that "pāṣaṇḍas and chāṇḍālas are to dwell near the cremation ground (beyond the city)" [II. 4]. Elsewhere [II. 36] Kautilya also rules that no pāṣaṇḍas could be accommodated in a dharmaśālā without the permission of the city officer, Gopa, and their abode should be searched for suspicious characters.

For they all desire restraint of passions and purity of heart.

But men are of various inclinations and of various passions. They may thus perform the whole or a part <sup>1</sup> (of their duties). But of him whose liberality is, too, not great, restraint of passion, inner purity, gratitude and constancy of devotion should be indispensable <sup>2</sup> and commendable.<sup>3</sup>

VIII

[SHAHBAZGARHI]

In past periods, Their Sacred Majesties <sup>4</sup> used to go out <sup>5</sup> on so-called Vihārayātrās <sup>6</sup> (excursions for enjoyment). In these were hunting <sup>7</sup> and other similar

<sup>1</sup> Ekadeśam : the word occurs also in R.E. V and K.R.E. I.

<sup>2</sup> Niche (S., M. and K.) ; niche (D. and J.) ; nichā (G.). Interpreted by Senart and Thomas as nityam, i.e., "always, permanent, indispensable." But the word for nityam is nikyam in the Kalsi text of R.E. XIV. Bühler took niche as locative singular = "in a lowly man." Luders and Hultzsck take it in the sense of "low or mean," i.e., as nom. sing. masc., in which case the passage will be translated thus : "But he whose liberality is great, but whose restraint, inner purity, gratitude and firmness of faith are non-existent—such a man is very mean."

The word nichā for "low" or "down country," "in the south," is also used in R.E. XIII.

<sup>3</sup> Padham ; bādham (G.).

<sup>4</sup> Devanam̐priya, which is thus seen to have been the title of Asoka's predecessors too ; in the Girnar and Dhauli versions, it is rājāno and lājāne.

<sup>5</sup> Nikramiṣu ; G. has ñayāsu which Michelson [J.A.O.S., 31. 245] takes as equivalent to nyayāsuḥ in the sense of nirayāsuḥ.

<sup>6</sup> Kautilya [II. 2] provides for a reserved forest for the king's vihāra or pleasures of sport.

<sup>7</sup> According to Mahāvamsa [v. 154], Asoka's own brother, Tissa, had indulged in hunting as his uparāja, so that hunting was permitted by him as a royal pastime down to at least 266 B.C., when Tissa left the world and became a monk. The statement of Asoka about the pleasures of sport indulged in by his predecessors is also confirmed by what the Greek writers tell us about Chandragupta Maurya. The chase is one of the three things (the two others being diversions.<sup>1</sup> But His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the present King, when he had been consecrated ten years, went out to the place of Sambodhi,<sup>2</sup> whence these Dharma- “sacrifice” and administrative work) which draw the king out of the palace. He goes to the chase like Dionysos: “crowds of women surround him, and outside of this circle spearmen are ranged. The road is marked off with ropes, and it is death for man and woman alike to pass within the ropes. Men with drums and gongs lead the procession. The king hunts in the enclosures and shoots arrows from a platform. At his side stand two or three armed women. If he hunts in the open grounds he shoots from the back of an elephant. Of the women, some are in chariots, some on horses and some even on elephants, and they are equipped with weapons of every kind, as if they were going on a campaign” [Megasthenes, Fragm. xxvii.]. The merits of mrugaya, i.e., mrīgayā, are also discussed by Kauṭilya [VIII. 3]. While Piśuṇa condemns it as a vyasana, or indulgence, chiefly for its physical dangers from robbers, enemies, wild animals, forest fires, accidents, hunger, thirst, and even mistake about direction and destination, Kauṭilya approves of it as a vyāyāma or healthy physical exercise, destroying the excess of phlegm, bile, fat, and perspiration, and improving one's marksmanship and knowledge of the tempers of wild beasts. This opinion is, indeed, worthy of the minister of Chandragupta, a warm lover of the chase.

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps the animal fights already referred to under R.E. I.

<sup>2</sup> Nikrami or Ayāya Sambodhim, lit., proceeded towards Enlightenment; cf. the expression Samghe upayāte of M.R.E. I. The events referred to in these two expressions are similar in character and took place also about the same time, 260 B.C. The term Sambodhi is used in the Mahāvamsa [v. 266] in the sense of Buddhism which was taught Asoka by Upagupta after 262 B.C. [Ib. 227]. The Vrihat Svayambhū Purāṇam also represents Asoka as approaching Upagupta for instruction. as regards “Sambodhi-vrata, sambodhi-sādhana, or Bodhi-mārga” [Fasciculus, I. p. 20].

“Going to Sambodhi” may, however, mean a physical process, as Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar has suggested; it indicates a journey to the place of Enlightenment, i.e., to Bodh Gayā. This meaning follows from the statement that this journey is designated as, and included among, the Dharma-yātrās, the royal pilgrimages through the country, which were fraught with so much good for it. The “going to Sambodhi” or Gayā was the first of Asoka's Dharma-yātrās, which afterwards became the order of the day, as definitely stated in the Edict in the expression, tenesā dharmayātā (G.). The Divyāvadāna, however, makes Lumbini-vana as the first of the holy places visited by Asoka on his pilgrimage with Upagupta, and his visit to Bodhi-mūla following afterwards. The Div. dates Asoka's pilgrimage as following the construction of his jātrās in which are the following: visits and gifts to Brahmans and Śramaṇas; visits and gifts of gold<sup>1</sup> to the elders; visits to the people of the country,<sup>2</sup> instructing them in morality, and discussions with them on same as suitable thereto.<sup>3</sup>

vihāras and stūpas which, according to the Mahāvamsa [v. 173], were completed after the seventh year of his coronation, i.e., after about 262 B.C., and so the legends may be taken to be at one with the inscription on this point. The Divyāvadāna further states that after his first visit to the Bodhi-tree, Asoka became so much attached to it that it roused the jealousy of his then Chief, but wicked, Queen, Tiṣyarakṣitā who had a spell cast upon the tree to destroy it. Eventually she had to yield to the king's devotion to the tree, and to accompany him on his anxious visit to the tree with elaborate measures to revive it.

In place of ayāya (Sambodhiṃ) are used in other versions nikrami, nikhamiṭhā, a word already used in R.E. III and K.R.E. II to indicate the sending out of officers on tour.

<sup>1</sup> Hiraṇa-praṭividhane: cf. baṃdhanabadhasa paṭividhānāya in R.E. V. This statement about Asoka's journeys being attended with gifts of gold is supported by the Divyāvadāna where, on the occasion of his visit to each Buddhist holy place, Asoka is said to have given away 100,000 gold pieces (śatasahasraṃ dattam). He is also said to have built at each such place a chaitya or shrine as a memorial of his visit. That he must have built such a shrine at Bodh-Gayā is inferred from the fact that it must have served as the prototype of the representations of the Bodhi-tree with its stone surround and temple figured among the sculptures at Sanchi and Bharhut where, moreover, there is the identifying inscribed label, "Bhagavato Sākamunino Bodhi (Asatho)," "Aśvattha, the Bodhi-tree of Bhagavān Śākyamuni" [see Foucher's Beginnings of Buddhist Art, p. 102, and Marshall's Guide to Sanchi, pp. 51, 61, 65, 71]. Bloch, however, thinks [ASR, 1908-9, pp. 146 f.] that the Bharhut relievo cannot be taken to be the representation of the supposed Asokan fencing round the Bodhi-tree in the absence of any remains, while of the extant remains, the railing, the oldest part, from its inscriptions naming the kings, Indrāgnimitra and Brahmanimitra, is clearly post-Asokan, of the Śuṅga period, and the other part is of the Gupta period, with its figures of Garuḍas, Kīrtimukhas, stūpas, etc.

<sup>2</sup> Janapadasa janasa as distinguished from the Paurajana, or townspeople.

<sup>3</sup> Tatopayam = tadopayā (G.), akin to Sanskrit tadaupāyika or tadupayogī, suitable for that; some take it as tataḥ param.

BHARHUT SCULPTURE SHOWING THE BODH-GAYA TEMPLE AND AN IMITATION ASOKAN PILLAR WITH ELEPHANT CAPITAL.

This becomes a great delight,<sup>1</sup> an additional<sup>2</sup> portion,<sup>3</sup> of His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King.

IX.

[KALSI]

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King : People perform various ceremonies.<sup>4</sup> In troubles,<sup>5</sup> marriages of sons<sup>6</sup> and daughters,<sup>7</sup> birth of children, departures from home—on these and other (occasions) people perform many different ceremonies. But in such (cases) mothers and wives<sup>8</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Rati, lāti, and abhiḷāme (Dhauḷi text) = abhirāma. Cf. Sans. rati = delight.

<sup>2</sup> Amñi, aṇe (M.).

<sup>3</sup> Bhago. The meaning is that Asoka derived from the dharma-yātrās an additional pleasure, such as his predecessors could not derive from their viḥāra-yātrās.

Usually bhāge amñe (G.) have been taken as locatives = Pāli and Sans. apara-bhāge, "on the other side." But the locative in the eastern dialect would add to the two words the ending -asi, as shown by Hultsch [Corpus, p. 15, n. 6]. Hultsch, however, translates the passage differently : "This (esā) second (amñe) period (bhāge) (of the reign) of King Devānāmpriya Priyadarśin becomes a pleasure in a higher degree" [Ibid.].

<sup>4</sup> Maṅgalam, the meaning of which is indicated, as Mr. K. P. Jayaswal has pointed out [JBORS, vol. iv. p. 146], in the Mahāmaṅgala Jātaka. It indicates the special ceremonies which are performed to secure some good or avert some evil, and involved sacrifice of animal life, the real reason for Asoka's objection to them. The idea of this Edict is suggested by the Mahāmaṅgala Sutta [Sutta Nipātā, ii. 4], where among the best of maṅgalas the Buddha instances "waiting on father and mother, protecting child and wife, giving alms, looking after relatives, patience, and pleasant speech, intercourse with samaṇas, and so forth."

<sup>5</sup> Ābādhasi, illness or troubles.

<sup>6</sup> Avāha, "bringing in the married couple."

<sup>7</sup> Vivāha, "sending out the daughter."

<sup>8</sup> Abakajaniyo, i.e., arbhakajanani; mahiḍāyo (G.) (mahilā), ithi (strī) (D.), striyaka (S.) and balikajanika (M.) (abaka, according to Hultsch).

perform numerous and diverse, petty<sup>1</sup> and worthless ceremonies.<sup>2</sup>

Now ceremonies should certainly be performed. But these bear little fruit. That, however, is productive of great fruit which is connected with Dharma. Herein are these : Proper treatment of slaves and employees,<sup>3</sup> reverence to

<sup>1</sup> Khudā; also chhudam (G.) (kṣudram) and putika (S.) (pūtika, stinking, foul).

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Bloch regards the worship of the Bodhi Tree as one of such ceremonies, and finds in Asoka's contempt for these, as expressed here, the reason for believing in the truth of the tradition, already narrated, that Asoka once made "a determined effort to destroy the Bodhi Tree" as recorded by Yuan Chwang [ASR, 1908-9, p. 140]. That is why no remains whatever have been brought to light so far in Bodhi Gayā, which might be ascribed to Asoka, as further concluded by Dr. Bloch [Ib.].

<sup>3</sup> Dāsa-bhaṭakasi samyā (samma in S.) -paṭipati. According to the Sigālovāda suttanta [cited under R.E. III] the master (ayiraka) should minister (pachchupaṭṭhātabbā) to his servants and employees (dāsa-kammakarā) in five ways, viz., "by assigning them work according to their strength (yathā ḥalam kammanta samvīdhānena); by supplying them with food and wages (bhatta-vettana); by tending them in sickness (gilānupaṭṭhānena); by sharing with them unusual delicacies (achchhariyānam rūṣānam samvibhāgena); by granting leave at times [samaye vossaggena: i.e., 'by constant relaxation so that they need not work all day, and special leave with extra food and adornment for festivals, etc.']. (Commentary)]. It is also to be noted that Kauṭilya in his Arthaśāstra has two chapters dealing with the rights and duties of dāsas and karmakaras or bhṛitakas, slaves and hirelings [III. 13 and 14]. According to him, a man became a slave as a captive in war (dhvajāhṛitaḥ), or for inability to pay off debts incurred to meet domestic troubles, or government demand for fines and court decrees. But such slavery for an Ārya could always be redeemed. What Asoka means by "proper treatment" of these slaves and paid servants is, therefore, the treatment to which they were entitled under the law as expounded by Kauṭilya. The law made penal the following offences against slaves, viz., (a) defrauding a slave of his property and privileges; (b) mis-employing him (such as making him carry corpses or sweep) or hurting or abusing him. As regards the karmakara, the law secured to him his wages under the agreement between him and his master, which should be known to their neighbours (karmakarasya karmasambandhamāsannā vīḍyuh). The amount of the wages was to be determined by the nature of the work and the time taken in doing it. Non-payment of such wages was fined. The bhṛitaka was also entitled to his vetana or legal wages, teachers,<sup>1</sup> restraint of violence towards living creatures and liberality to Brahman and Śramaṇa ascetics.<sup>2</sup> These and such others are called Dharma-maṅgalas.

Therefore should it be said by a father, or a son, or a brother, or a master, or a friend, a companion, and even a neighbour : " This is commendable ; this is the ceremony to be performed until the purpose thereof is fulfilled ; this shall I perform." <sup>3</sup> For those ceremonies that are other than these <sup>4</sup>—they <sup>5</sup> are all of doubtful effect. It may achieve and to some concession if he was incapacitated for work (aśaktaḥ), or put to ugly work (kutsita karma), or was in illness or distress (vyādhau vyasane). In another chapter, Kauṭilya [II. 1] lays down as the king's duty to correct (vinayaṃ grāhaṇet) those who neglect their duty towards slaves and relatives (dāśaśītakabandhūnaśṛiṇvato), and punishes with a fine the person of means not supporting his wife and children, father and mother, minor brothers, or widowed sisters and daughters.

<sup>1</sup> Gurūnaṃ apachiti (G.) ; teachers (āchariyā) are to be served by their pupils (antevāsinaḥ) in five ways : " by rising (from their seat in salutation, utthānena) ; by waiting upon them (upaṭṭhānena) ; by eagerness to learn (sussūśāya) ; by personal service (parichariyāya) ; and by attention when receiving their teaching (sakkachcham sippa-paṭiggahaṇena) " [Ib.].

<sup>2</sup> In R.E. III and Girnar texts of other edicts where the expression occurs, it is of the form Brāhmaṇa-Śramaṇa, but elsewhere it is Śramaṇa-brāhmaṇa. According to Pāṇini [ii. 2, 34], the correct Sanskrit form should be Śramaṇa-brāhmaṇam, but, according to Vārttika, the order of the two words in such compounds is the order of social precedence conveyed by them. Thus in this view it may be inferred that the expression Śramaṇa-brāhmaṇa must have been used in places or by writers preferring Buddhism to Brāhmanism. Later, this interesting compound came to be cited by Patañjali as an example under Pāṇini's rule [ii. 4, 9] to indicate standing enmity, as between the cat and the mungoose, between the Brāhmaṇa and the Śramaṇa, and Patañjali is supported also by the later Kāśikā. Thus the sense of both the Asokan compounds, Devānāmpriya and Śramaṇa-brāhmaṇa has deteriorated in course of history.

<sup>3</sup> Hultzsch reads " imam kachhāmi ti." Buhler reads here " ka [tha] miti."

<sup>4</sup> E hi itale magale ; ye hi etake magale (Shah.) ; ehi itare magale (Man.).

<sup>5</sup> Se ; tam (S.).

that purpose or may not. And it is only for this world. But this ceremonial of Dharma is not of time. Even if one does not achieve that object in this world, in the world beyond is produced endless merit. But if one achieves that purpose in this world, the gain of both results from it—that object in this world, and endless merit is produced in the other world by this Dharma-maṅgala.<sup>1</sup>

X

[KALSI]

His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King does not regard glory or fame as bringing much gain except that whatever glory or fame he desires, it would be only for this that the people might in the present time and in the future<sup>2</sup> should practise obedience to Dharma and conform to the observances of Dharma. For this purpose does His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King wish for glory or fame. And what little he exerts<sup>3</sup> himself, that is all for the hereafter, and in order that all may be free from confinement (or <sup>1</sup> Instead of this paragraph, the Girnar, Dhauḷi, and Jaugada texts have the following : “ And this, too, is stated that liberality is commendable. But there is no such liberality or favour as the gift of religion (dharma-dānam), or the favour of religion. Therefore should a friend, lover (suhṛdayena), relative, or patron, exhort, on such and such occasions, thus : ‘ This should be done ; this is laudable ; by this one is able to attain heaven.’ And what is more worth doing than the attainment of heaven ? ”

The words dhamma-dāna and dhammānuggaha occur in the Itivuttaka :

<sup>2</sup> Ayatiye ; the Girnar text reads dighāya = dīrghāya, i.e., long time to come. The word for “ the present ” is tadātṭhano (Girnar) or tadattvāye (Kalsi), which is explained by Thomas [JRAS, 1916, p. 120] in the light of the words tadātvānubandhau, “ immediate and future effects,” and tādātvika, “ one who lives in the moment and spends as he gets ” (yo yad yad utpadyate tad tad bhakṣayati so tādātvikaḥ), used by Kauṭilya [II. 9 ; IX. 4]. Kauṭilya also uses the expression tadātvē cha āyatyām cha in V. 1 and 4.

<sup>3</sup> Lakamati, parakramati (S.), a favourite word of Asoka in his Edicts [M.R.E. I, R.E. VI].

bondage).<sup>1</sup> And this is bondage, viz., sin.<sup>2</sup> This is, indeed, difficult of achievement by the lowly or high<sup>3</sup> in rank<sup>4</sup> except by strenuous preliminary<sup>5</sup> effort, renouncing all.<sup>6</sup> But among these<sup>7</sup> (two), it is the more difficult of achievement by the person of superior rank.

XI

[SHAHBAZGARHI]

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King : There is no such gift as the gift of Dharma,<sup>8</sup> acquaintance in Dharma,<sup>9</sup> or the distribution of Dharma, or kinship in

<sup>1</sup> Apapalāṣave ; aparīsrave (S.) ; apaparīsrave (G.) ; from root śri, to surround, encircle, enclose. Literally, it might mean "in little peril" = alpa-parīsrave.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. the expression vaddha-jīva, i.e., soul that is "cribbed, cabined, and confined," and not free.

<sup>3</sup> Uṣuṭṭena = uchchhritena, "of high degree."

<sup>4</sup> Vagenā = vargena, i.e., by status; the word also occurs in K.R.E. I, but in a different sense, which is by some supposed to be the sense here too. In that case, the meaning would be "officers of low and high rank."

<sup>5</sup> Agenā ; cf. R.E. VI.

<sup>6</sup> Savaṃ palitiditu [also parichajitpā (G.) and paritijitu (S.)]. This makes more definite the idea first expressed by Asoka in M.R.E. I by the expression parākramamānena or dhamayutena (Maski text), which refers ultimately to concentration of effort, renouncing all other interests. Hultzsch notes : "the usual translation, 'renouncing everything,' is improbable because Asoka nowhere advocates absolute poverty, though he recommends 'moderation in possessions' in R.E. III." He translates it as "laying aside every (other aim)." Cf. savachati rati in R.E. XIII, Shah., l. 12.

<sup>7</sup> Heta ; atra in Mansehra text.

<sup>8</sup> The expression dharmadānam and the sense of the whole passage are to be found in the Dhammapāda, verse 354, as shown by Senart — Sabbadānam dharmadānam jīnāti, "the gift of Dharma prevails over all gifts."

<sup>9</sup> Interpreters of this Edict have not explained how the items that follow are to be taken as illustrations of what have been called (1) Dharma-dāna, (2) Dharma-saṁstava, (3) Dharma-saṁvibhāga (4) Dharma-saṁbandha. Unless this is understood the sense of the Edict will be missed. These four expressions may be taken to refer Dharma. It is as follows : proper treatment of slaves and servants, obedience to mother and father, liberality to friends, companions, relations, Brāhmaṇa and Śramaṇa ascetics, and abstention from slaughter of living creatures for sacrifice.

This is to be preached by father, son, brother, master, friend, comrade, or neighbour—that this is commendable, this should be accepted as duty. Thus doing, one gains<sup>1</sup> this world while infinite merit occurs in the world beyond by this dharma-dāna.

XII

[GIRNAR]

His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King is honouring all sects,<sup>2</sup> both ascetics, and house-holders ;<sup>3</sup> by gifts and to the different relations and activities of life, such as those connected with gifts, acquaintance, kinship or distribution of riches (samvibhāga). These Asoka wants to be based on, and regulated by, morality. If a man has to give, he should preferably give to Brāhmaṇas and Śramaṇas, and thereby support Dharma and make his gifts a Dharma-dāna, a righteous gift as distinguished from adharma-dāna, gift to unlawful objects. Similarly, the proper relationship* (Dharma-sambandha) with one's parents is obedience to them. Friendship must be based not on mere sentiment, but on liberality, and then alone will it be Dharma-samistava. Lastly, the blessings of Dharma should be widely distributed so as to reach the lowly members of the household, its slaves and servants, nay, even the dumb animals, so that they may be spared improper treatment and violence. This is implied by Dharma-samvibhāga.

To these four terms, expressive of the application of morality to domestic life and relations, may be added the fifth term used by Asoka in R.E. XIII, viz., Dharma-vijaya, which applies to the conduct of a king. We have also the expressions dharma-yātrā in R.E. VIII ; dharmānugraha, dharma-dāna, and dharma-maṅgala in R.E. IX ; dharma-stambha, dharmā-srāvāṇa in P.E. VII ; and the well-known word dharma-mahāmātra in so many Edicts.

<sup>1</sup> Aradheti : Senart quotes ārādhaye maggam from Dhammapāda, verse 281.

<sup>2</sup> Pāsaṃdāni ; also praśaṃdāni (S.) ; paśaḍani (M.) ; below K. has the form pāśada and S. praśada ; the word is also used in R.E. VII and XIII.

<sup>3</sup> The various pāśaṇḍas or sects are made up of two classes of people—the ascetics and the householders.

offerings of various kinds is he honouring them. But His Sacred Majesty does not value such gifts or honours as that how should there be the growth of the essential elements<sup>1</sup> of all religious sects. The growth of this genuine matter is, however, of many kinds. But the root of it is restraint of speech, that is, that there should not be honour of one's own sect and condemnation of others' sects without any ground. Such slighting<sup>2</sup> should be for specified grounds only. On the other hand, the sects of others should be honoured for this ground and that.<sup>3</sup> Thus doing, one helps his own sect to grow, and benefits the sects of others, too. Doing otherwise, one hurts<sup>4</sup> his own sect and injures the sects of others. For whosoever honours his own sect and condemns the sects of others wholly from devotion to his own sect, i.e., the thought, "How I may glorify<sup>5</sup> my own sect,"—one acting thus<sup>6</sup> injures more gravely his own sect on the contrary. Hence concord<sup>7</sup> alone is commendable, in this sense that all should listen and be willing to listen to the doctrines professed by others. This is, in fact, the desire of His Sacred Majesty, viz., that <sup>1</sup> Sāravadhī = sāra-vṛiddhi. Asoka's meaning is that the greatness of a sect does not depend so much upon the external support or reverence it can command, the number of its followers, as upon its inner essence, its vital principles. The vital and essential principles no doubt themselves differ among different sects, but Asoka discovers the common root of them all, which is a wide-hearted toleration recognising that there is an element of truth in every sect, to be respected by all sects.

<sup>2</sup> Lahukā from laghu.

<sup>3</sup> Tena tana prakaraṇena; the Shah. and Mans. texts have akarena = ākāreṇa, i.e., "in every way."

<sup>4</sup> Chhaṇati; ksaṇati (S.), hurts.

<sup>5</sup> Dīpayema.

<sup>6</sup> So cha puna tatha karāto or karamtam (S.); the Shahbazgarhi text shows another mistake in writing by repeating this clause.

<sup>7</sup> Samavāyo; but Shah. reads sayamo, i.e., saṃyamaḥ, restraint of speech. Bhandarkar [Asoka, p. 299] translates the word by "concourse" in the sense of "coming together, assembling." But for the Shah. correspondent saṃyama, this meaning would have been more suitable in view of the next phrase which implies "hearing" and is suggestive of an assembly.

all sects should be possessed of wide learning<sup>1</sup> and good doctrines. And those who are content in their respective faiths, should all be told that His Sacred Majesty does not value so much gift or external honour as that there should be the growth of the essential elements, and breadth,<sup>2</sup> of all sects.

For this purpose, are, indeed, employed the Dharma-mahāmātras, Strī-adhyakṣa-mahāmātras<sup>3</sup> (Mahāmātras in charge of, or who were, the superintendents of women), the officers in charge of pastures<sup>4</sup> and other <sup>1</sup> Bahusrutā : this is suggested by the previous exhortation that the sects should not remain self-contained, but should know each other's doctrines. Such knowledge will promote harmony. The term "Bahusruta" is mentioned as a technical academic title for Buddhist monks by Itsing (Takakusu's tr., p. 180).

<sup>2</sup> Bahakā, breadth of outlook and sympathies, the result of bahusruta. Hultzsch takes it in the sense of many, i.e., as an adjective qualifying the officers mentioned in the sentence following.

<sup>3</sup> Ithīhakṣa-mahāmātā; ithidhiyakṣa-mahāmātā (Kalsi); istrijakṣa-mahāmātra (Mansehra). It is usually translated as simply "censors of the women," ignoring the word adhyakṣa. It is possible to take the Mahāmātras as being themselves the adhyakṣas or superintendents of the women. That the Mahāmātras were in charge of women is stated in R.E. V.

<sup>4</sup> Vachabhūmikā, also vrachabhumika (Shah. and Mans). The word vracha (also used in R.E. VI) means vraja or pasture, and bhūmi denotes office. It is not, however, clear how officers dealing with pastures and women can promote the cause of toleration among the different sects. The passage as interpreted up to now does not fit in with the context, unless we suppose that the expression might indicate the officers in charge of the high roads along which travelled the people and pilgrims, and these vrajabhūmikas could usefully work among the travellers. There is also a suggestion that the vraja-bhūmika might be the native of Vraja-bhūmi (i.e., the sacred land of Mathura and Brindāban), fond of pilgrimage and religious discussions, for which such officers could be profitably employed by government. But the other supposition is more likely. There were needed special officers to be in charge of roads, and rest-houses, which Asoka was so liberal in providing. It may be noted that Kautilya [II. 1] lays down as the king's duty the protection of the highways of commerce (vanik-patham) from molestations by courtiers, tax-collectors (kārmika), robbers, and wardens of the marches (Anta-pāla), and from damage by herds of cattle, and of the live stock of the country (pasuvrajān) from robbers, tigers, poisonous creatures, and diseases. Thus an bodies.<sup>1</sup> And the fruit of this is that the promotion of one's own sect takes place as well as the glorification<sup>2</sup> of the Dharma.<sup>3</sup>

officer like the vraja-bhūmika might very well be needed for discharging this duty and obligation of the king in respect of the paśuvraja and vanikpatha, an officer in charge of cattle and communications [including trade-routes by both land and sea—"sthala-patha vāripathaścha" (Kautilya, II. 37)]. The īvitādhyakṣa of Kautilya [II. 34] corresponds to such an officer. His duty was to establish wells and tanks, and groves of flowers and fruit-trees in arid tracts (anudake), to keep the roads in order, arrest thieves, see to the safety of caravans of merchants, and to protect cattle. Lastly, it may be noted that Kautilya [II. 6] has also used the term vraja to denote a subject of administration under the Samāhartā, defined as comprising the interests of the live-stock of the country such as kine, buffaloes, goats, sheep, asses, camels, horses, and mules.

Regarding women, perhaps it was necessary to preach the dharma of toleration to them as a class! That there were Alahāmātrās attached to the royal harem is also indicated by Kautilya [I. 10]: because they had to deal with ladies, their special qualification emphasised is sexual purity (kāmopadhāśuddhān), and they are to be placed in charge of the places of pleasure both in capital and outside (vāhyābhyantara-vihārarakṣāsu). The word vāhya of Kautilya occurs also in the R.E. V in the expression "Hida cha (or Pātālīpute cha) bāhilesu cha nagalesu." Again, in the Vinaya [vol. iv. p. 158], there is a reference to the appointment of religious preachers for the royal harem (itthāgāraṃ dhanimam vacchēhī). Hultzsch compares itthījhakka with the gaṇikādhyakṣa of Kautilya [II. 27]. The women are dealt with by the Dharma-Alahāmātrās in R.E. V, but here by a special class of officers. Thus R.E. XII must have been a later production than R.E. V—another proof that all the Edicts were not composed simultaneously. [See note under R.E. IV]

<sup>1</sup> Nikāyā. Cf. the word varga in K.R.E. II. Officials in charge of different sects are mentioned in R.E. VII.

<sup>2</sup> Dīpanā.

<sup>3</sup> The Dharma here may be taken to refer to the essence or vital element, the sāra, of each sect, which this Edict emphasises, and not to the Dharma as defined in other Edicts.

It may be noted that this Edict appears by itself on a separate rock at Shahbazgarhi as at Mansehra. Probably the conditions in these localities called for special attention being drawn to the lessons of toleration preached in this Edict. Kautilya [XIII. 5] also insists that the king who conquers a country should respect its religion and its festivals.

XIII <sup>1</sup>

[SHAHBAZGARHI]

By His Sacred and Gracious Majesty consecrated eight years was Kalinga conquered. One hundred and fifty thousand in number were those carried off from there, a hundred thousand in number were those who were slain <sup>2</sup> there, and many times as many those who were dead.<sup>3</sup>

Thereafter,<sup>4</sup> now,<sup>5</sup> the Kalingas being annexed, became <sup>1</sup> It is interesting to note that this Edict describing the conquest of Kalinga and its attendant cruelties and evils was not allowed by the emperor to appear among the other Edicts in Kalinga, probably out of his own sense of remorse, and respect for the feelings of the conquered people.

<sup>2</sup> Hate. G. reads "tatrāhataṃ = tatva āhataṃ." If so, the word hate should mean āhata or "wounded," but below hate is again used in the sense of "slain." The expression "vadha va maraṇaṃ va apavaho va" is used a little below, corresponding to "apavudhe, hate, and mūṭe" as used here.

<sup>3</sup> It may be that this Edict is guilty of an exaggeration here. If the number of those who died (of wounds received in the fight) be taken to be at least thrice that of the killed, the total number of casualties would be something like four lacs, and, adding to these the number of deportees, the total number of the army that fought on the battlefield would be at least 5½ lacs. If, with Goltz [The Nation in Arms, p. 148, quoted by Mr. K. P. Jayaswal in JBORS, vol. iii. p. 440], we assume that "every 15th soul of the population can take up arms in defence against a foreign invasion," the population of Kalinga in Asoka's time would number at least 75 lacs, as against the present population of 50 lacs. According to the famous Khāravela inscription of about a hundred years later, the population of Kalinga is stated to be 38 lacs, if the reading of Mr. Jayaswal [Ib.] is accepted. We may arrive at that figure by slightly altering the proportion of its fighting strength to its total population from six per cent., as stated by Goltz, to say eight per cent., which is quite reasonable. The heavy casualties in this war with the Kalingas were, no doubt, due to the heroism of their defence as well as to the number of the army. The interesting fact is given by Megasthenes [Fragm. 1. vi] that the king of the Kalingas had himself a standing bodyguard of "60,000 foot soldiers, 1000 horsemen, and 70<sup>0</sup> elephants."

<sup>4</sup> Tatopacha, tataḥ paśchāt.

<sup>5</sup> Adhuna.

intense <sup>1</sup> His Sacred Majesty's observance of Dharma, <sup>2</sup> love of Dharma, <sup>3</sup> and his preaching of the Dharma. There was the remorse <sup>4</sup> of His Sacred Majesty having conquered <sup>5</sup> the Kalingas. For where an independent country is forcibly reduced, that there are slaughter, death, and deportation of people has been considered very painful and deplorable by His Sacred Majesty. But this is considered even more grievous by His Sacred Majesty in as much as there <sup>6</sup> dwell Brāhmaṇa and Śramaṇa ascetics, or followers of other sects, <sup>7</sup> or householders, among whom are established (the following virtues), viz., obedience to elders, <sup>8</sup> to parents, and preceptors, proper conduct towards friends, companions, supporters and relatives, servants and dependents and steadfastness of devotion, whom befalls there injury or slaughter or removal <sup>9</sup> of their loved ones.

Or, if there are then incurring misfortune <sup>10</sup> the friends, acquaintances, helpmates, and relations of those whose affection (for them) is unabated, this becomes the affliction <sup>11</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Tivve, also tivo (G.). The significance of this word has been generally missed to the misreading of an important phase of Asoka's history, as explained in the body of the book. The view taken here is that the Kalinga conquest was followed by the increase of Asoka's faith in Buddhism, not by his conversion which took place earlier. Because he had already been a lay-Buddhist, he felt all the more keenly the cruelties of the war.

<sup>2</sup> Dhramapalanam; dhamma-vāyo in other texts. Hultzsch reads Dhramaśilana = study of morality.

<sup>3</sup> Dhrama-kamata; dhamma-kāmatā (K.).

<sup>4</sup> Anusochana; also anuṣaye (K.).

<sup>5</sup> Vijiniti; vijinitu in K.

<sup>6</sup> Tatra.

<sup>7</sup> Amñe va praśanida; the Buddhists call all non-Buddhist sects as pāśandas, heretics.

<sup>8</sup> Agrabhuṭi; cf. the use of the word agra in other Edicts [R.E. X, VI]. K. reads agabhuti which Bühler took to mean agrajanman, a member of a higher caste, or a Brāhmaṇa. But Hultzsch thinks that bhuṭi in agrabhuṭi corresponds to Sans. bhṛiti, and takes agrabhuṭi to mean "those who receive high pay."

<sup>9</sup> Nikramaṇam; cf. the use of the word in other Edicts [R.E. III (K.), R.E. II].

<sup>10</sup> Vasana; vyasanam (G.); misfortune, due to their bereavement.

<sup>11</sup> Apaghatho, also upaghāto (G.).

of them, too, though they are (themselves) well provided for.<sup>1</sup>

Thus these (ills) are of all men in equal shares<sup>2</sup> but felt most by His Sacred Majesty.<sup>3</sup> [There is, again, no country where do not exist these classes,<sup>4</sup> viz., Brāhmaṇa and Śramaṇa ascetics, except among the Yonas.<sup>5</sup>] There is no (place) in any country where there is not a faith of people in one or other of the sects.

Therefore, even a hundredth or the thousandth part of all those people who were wounded, slain, or carried off captives, in Kalinga, would now be considered grievous by His Sacred <sup>1</sup> Suvihitanam : the expression points to the non-combatant civilian population, who nevertheless felt hit by the war, though indirectly, through the sufferings it caused to their near and dear ones. Their very virtue of fellow-feeling (sneha) brings them to grief. Asoka thus repents the war (1) for the sufferings of the soldiers, (2) for the sufferings of the families of soldiers that were mostly virtuous people, and (3) the sufferings of the general body of citizens connected with the bereaved families by ties of affection, dependence, or kinship. Thus the suffering of the war is not localised, but becomes general, affecting all classes of people in the country.

<sup>2</sup> Pratibhagam.

<sup>3</sup> The king who regards "all men as his children" [K.R.E.] has to take a share of the suffering of all.

<sup>4</sup> Nikāyā : this sentence does not appear in the Shah., but only in the Kalsi, Girnar and Mansehra texts.

<sup>5</sup> An echo of the canonical passage addressed by the Buddha to Assalāyana : "Sutante : Yonakambojesu aññesu cha pachchantimesu janapadesu dueva vaṇṇā, ayyoch' eva dāso cha ; ayyo 'utvā dāso hoti, dāso hutvā ayyo hotīti ?" "Have you heard this : that in the Yona, Kamboja, and other border countries, there are only two varṇas or social classes, ārya, master, and dāsa, servant ; that an ārya may become a dāsa and a dāsa may become an ārya ?" This passage shows that as early as the time of the Buddha and Āśvalāyana these Yonas, Kambojas, and other peoples on the Indian frontier, were outside the pale of Indian society with its characteristic divisions into castes and sects. The only divisions they had in their society were the economic ones, the divisions between the class of employers and that of the employees, and these divisions were more or less elastic and interchangeable, unlike the castes of Indian society which were rigidly fixed, so that one could not pass from one caste to another. [Majjhima-Nikāya ii. 149, P.T.S.] (I owe this reference to Mr. C. D. Chatterji.)

Majesty. Nay, even if any one does mischief, what can be forgiven is considered as fit to be forgiven by His Sacred Majesty. Even those forest peoples<sup>1</sup> who have come under the dominions of His Sacred Majesty—even these he seeks to win over to his way of life and thought.<sup>2</sup> And it is said unto them how even in his repentance<sup>3</sup> is the might<sup>4</sup> of His Sacred Majesty, so that they may be ashamed (of their crimes) and may not be killed. Indeed, His Sacred Majesty desires towards all living beings freedom from harm, restraint of passions, impartiality and cheerfulness.<sup>5</sup>

And what is Dharma-vijaya,<sup>6</sup> moral conquest, is considered

<sup>1</sup> Aṭavi; also aṭaviyo (G.). It may be noted that Kautilya [XIII. 5] mentions two kinds of conquests, viz. (1) the conquest of the Aṭavyas or foresters, and (2) the conquest of settled territory (grāmādi). He places the aṭavyas under the administration of special officers called the Aṭavīpāla [I. 16, etc.].

<sup>2</sup> Anuneti, also anunayati (M.). I take the words in their literal sense: anu-nayati = brings them to the same discipline; anunijapeti, anunijhapayati (M.) = anunidhyāpayati, i.e., make them follow the same line of thinking.

<sup>3</sup> Anutape: cf. anuśochanam used above.

<sup>4</sup> Prabhava = prabhāva, power. It is connected with the word hamñeyasu which follows. Provided the wild tribes behave decently, they will be kindly treated: otherwise they will feel the compelling power of the emperor.

<sup>5</sup> Another definition of the Dharma specially meant for these ruder peoples who must first be trained in the elementary virtues of life specified here. They must first get over "the state of nature" in which they live, the state of war among themselves, and form themselves into a "civil society" resting on self-restraint, fellow-feeling, and the joy of a communal life. Thus Asoka does not place before these ruder folks his usual definition of Dharma involving the cultivation of proper domestic and social relations.

The word for "cheerfulness" is rabhasiye as taken by Buhler from Sans. rābhasya. But rābhasya may also mean "violence," in which sense it is taken by Luders and Hultzsch, who explain samachariyam rabhasiye as "impartiality in case of violence," taking rabhasiye as locative case. Instead of rabhasiye, G. and K. read mādava and madava, i.e., mildness, compassion.

<sup>6</sup> It is interesting to note that the term dharmavijaya is not newly coined by Asoka, though he gives it his own, and a new, meaning. The term has been used by Kautilya [XII. 1] who distinguishes three classes of conquerors as (a) Dharmavijayī, who is satisfied with the

by His Sacred Majesty the principal conquest. And this has been repeatedly won by His Sacred Majesty both here (in his dominions) and among all the frontier peoples even to the extent of six hundred yojanas where (are) the Yona king, Antiochos by name, and, beyond that Antiochos, the four kings named Ptolemy, Antigonos, Magas and Alexander<sup>1</sup>; below,<sup>2</sup> the Cholas, Pāṇḍyas, as far as Tāmraparṇī.<sup>3</sup> mere obeisance of the conquered; (b) Lobha-vijayī, whose greed has to be satisfied by the surrender of territory and treasure; and (c) Asura-vijayī, who would be satisfied with the surrender of not merely territory and treasure, but even the sons and wives of the conquered, and even taking away his life. According to this characterisation of conquerors, probably Asoka, as conqueror of the innocent Kalingas, had behaved like the Asura-vijayī, the unrighteous conqueror! This transition from an Asura-vijayī to a Dharma-vijayī had no doubt followed the transformation of Chandāsoka to Dharmāsoka!

It may be noted that the Mahābhārata also [Śanti P., Rajadharma, ch. 59, v. 38] refers to three kinds of conquest or vijaya, viz. (1) Dharmayukta-vijaya, (2) Artha-vijaya, and (3) Asura-vijaya.

<sup>1</sup> Historically perhaps the most important passage of the Edicts, as it helps the working out of Asoka's chronological history. The five Greek contemporaries of Asoka were all alive up to 258 B.C. when one of them died, and if Asoka could not hear of it till a year later, then the date of this reference would be 257 B.C. We know from R.E. III, IV and V that the Rock Edicts were issued in the twelfth and thirteenth year of his consecration which took place in 270 B.C., whence his accession should be dated in 274 B.C. The Greek kings referred to were (1) Antiochos II. Theos of Syria (261-246 B.C.), also mentioned in R.E. II (2) Ptolemy II. Philadelphos of Egypt (285-247 B.C.) (3) Antigonos Gonats of Macedonia (278-239 B.C.) (4) Magas of Cyrene (west of Egypt), (300-258 B.C.) (5) Alexander of Epirus (272 ?-258 B.C.). The identification of these kings was due to Lassen [Indische Alterthumskunde, Bd. ii. p. 256 f.]. The view of Asoka's chronology as taken here (which is also that of Cambridge History) does not admit of the suggestion of Bloch that No. (5) might be the Alexander of Corinth who reigned between 252-244 B.C. [see JRAS, 1914, p. 944]. The dates of the other kings are those accepted in the Cambridge History of India, vol. i. p. 502.

<sup>2</sup> Nicha, i.e., in the south, down country; the meaning of the word does not seem to be satisfactorily settled. Is it in any way connected with some western peoples called Nichyas in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa [viii. 14, 2, 3]?

We may here note that by the expression "iha cha saveṣu cha anītesu," in l. 8, Asoka distinguishes the Āntas from his subject peoples. The Āntas are also described as avijita, unsubdued, in K.R.E. I, and referred to in R.E. II, where the alternative term pratyanta is also used, and also in M.R.E. I, R.E. II, and this Edict shows that by the term Āntas, Asoka meant peoples outside his dominion, both in India and beyond, viz., the Cholas, Pāṇḍyas, Satiyaputra, Kerala-putra, in India, and, beyond, up to the limit of 600 yojanas, the peoples under the five Greek kings named here. Then there is another class of peoples referred to by the term Āparāntas, the peoples belonging to the definite geographical region called Āparānta, among whom are named the following, viz., the Yonas, Kambojas, Pitinikas (in both R.E. V and here), the Nabhapaintis, Bhojas, Andhras and Pulindas, in this Edict, and the Gandhāras and Rāṣṭrikas in R.E. V. The term Āparānta is, however, used for the peoples named in R.E. V. only, while in this Edict they are described as living "idha-rāja-visayamhi" (G.), i.e., in the king's territories but not within his direct jurisdiction (vijitasi, R.E. II). Thus the Āparāntas were like protected peoples, while the Āntas were absolutely independent. It is also to be noted that the Āparānta Yonas were the Greeks who were settled in India. A Yona-rājā named Tuṣāṣpha even entered the service of Asoka as his provincial governor at Girnar (in Aparānta?).

Likewise, here in the king's dominion,<sup>4</sup> among the

<sup>3</sup> See the note on the word in R.E. II.

<sup>4</sup> Hida rajaviṣavasi; raja-viṣavasi (M.); rājaviṣayamhi (G.); and lāja-ṣavasi (K.). The expression "rājaviṣaya," king's dominion, is to be taken as an antithesis to the expression "anītesu" of l. 8. The meaning is that while, among the Āntas or foreign peoples the king was achieving his dharma-vijaya, or moral conquest, within his empire, among the semi-independent peoples, his dharmānuṣṭi, or moral instruction, was being followed. Those within the empire were naturally subject to his anusāsana or instruction, and those outside and independent of it, to his vijaya, or conquest, of Love. Ojha takes the expression to be "itaḥ rājye Viśa (unknown people)—Vrajjisu (i.e., the Vrijis)." Jayaswal in his Hindu Polity [I. 144] takes it to mean "here among the rāja-viṣayas," and rājaviṣayas = ruling or sovereign states which were, according to R.E. V, āparāntas, i.e., countries inside the limits of the empire, as distinguished from the āntas, i.e., countries outside those limits. He does not explain rāja-viṣaya in the sense of Asoka's own dominion, because "Asoka always refers to his territories in the first person possessive." But this assumption is not correct: of the three references to his territories, two are without the first person possessive, viz., "savratra vijite Devanam-priyasa" of R.E. II (S.), and "mahalake hi vijite" of R.E. XIV (S.), and one only is with it, viz., "sarvata vijite mama yutā . . ." of R.E. III (G.), but even here the first person possessive might go with yutā instead of viḥite. Secondly, Mr. Jayaswal's interpretation takes rājaviṣaya, which is in the singular number in the text, as plural.

Yonas<sup>1</sup> and Kambojas, among the Nabhakas<sup>2</sup> and Nabhitis, (Nābhapaṃtis in K.), among Pitinikas,<sup>3</sup> among the Andhras

<sup>1</sup> These Yonas must have been the Greeks (Ionians) who had settled in the Aparānta provinces of Asoka's empire. Their exact place may be inferred as being contiguous to that of the Kambojas with whom they are associated in the Edicts, as also by Manu. The Kambojas were the people on the Kabul river, and so also those Yonas. This Greek colony is ingeniously identified by Jayaswal [Ib. p. 147] with the city state of Nysa, where Alexander and his army felt themselves at home for its Hellenic ways, while the name of its president, Akoubhi, he derives from the Vedic name Kūbhā of the Kabul river. Lassen identified it with one of the countries to the west of the Indus which was ceded by Seleucus to Asoka's grandfather. It may also be noted that Yona-raṭṭha, the country of the Yonas, was one of the countries to which, according to the Mahāvamsa, a Buddhist missionary was despatched by the Third Buddhist Council under Asoka. The immigration of these Yonas, Ionians, or Greeks into these regions must have taken place as early as the days of Cyrus, Darius, and Xerxes, and of the war between the Persian Empire and Hellas. The earlier references to these Yonas outside the Indian borders are in the expression Yavanāni lipi of Pāṇini [iv. 1, 49] and the passage quoted above from the Majjhima Nikāya.

<sup>2</sup> Bühler cites a passage from the Vaivarta Purāṇa which mentions a city called Nābhikapura as belonging to the Uttara-kurus, so that the Nābhapaṃtis might be a Himalayan people towards the north-west, the neighbours of the Kambojas. R.E. V mentions the Gandhāras in place of the Nābhapaṃtis who might be connected with them. The names, Nābhāka and Ūṇa-nābha, occur as names of peoples in the gaṇa-pāṭha for a sūtra of Pāṇini [iv. 1, 112; also cf. iv. 2, 53], and Jayaswal thinks that the Ūṇa-nābhas might be connected with Gandhāra famous for its wool since the Rigvedic times. Instead of Nābhapaṃtis, S. reads "Nabhitina," which Jayaswal interprets as the three Nābhas, there being three divisions of the same people like the three Yaudheyas or the five sections of the Yuechis.

<sup>3</sup> The context shows that these names are those of peoples outside Asoka's direct authority, and not of hereditary chiefs, as is taken by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar to be the meaning of the word petenika [see note under R.E. V]. Bühler places the Bhoja country in Vidarbha, but Hultzsch somewhere in the western regions. A king of the Bhojas is mentioned as a contemporary of Śaṅkaravarman of Kashmir by Kalhana.

and Palidas,<sup>1</sup> everywhere are (people) following the religious injunction of His Sacred Majesty. Even those to whom the envoys of His Sacred Majesty do not go,<sup>2</sup> having heard of His Sacred Majesty's practice, ordinances, and injunctions of Dharma, themselves follow, and will follow, the Dharma. The conquest that by this is won everywhere, that conquest, again, everywhere is productive of a feeling of Love. Love is won<sup>3</sup> in moral conquests. That love may be, indeed, slight,<sup>4</sup> but His Sacred Majesty<sup>5</sup> considers it productive of great fruit, indeed, in the world beyond.

For this purpose has this religious edict been indited that my sons and great-grandsons<sup>6</sup> that may be, should not think that a new conquest ought to be made; but that if a conquest is theirs (or pleases them),<sup>7</sup> they should relish

<sup>1</sup> It is significant that along with the Nichyas, the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa [vii. 18] also mentions the Andhras and the Pulindas. The Kāśikā on Pāṇini [v. 3, 144] mentions the Pulindas as a republican people (Pulinda-gaṇa). The Girnar text reads Pārimdesu, and Kālsī Pāladesu. Hultzsch [Corpus, p. xxxix] thinks that, like the Andhras, they should be an eastern people. The Pulindas are mentioned along with the Vindhyamūliyas, i.e., people at the foot of the Vindhya, in the Vāyu Purāṇa, and as near the Chedis in the Mahābhārata, Sabhā P. [29, 11]. Thus their country might have included Rupnath of the Minor Rock Edict.

<sup>2</sup> This shows that Asoka was already in the habit of sending his dūtas or envoys to the Greek states, just as these sent their own envoys like Megasthenes, Deimachos, and Dionysios, to the Mauryan Court. Asoka now utilises these dūtas for the preaching of his Dharma in these Greek kingdoms whither they were hitherto sent on purely political business, just as in his R.E. II he entrusts his purely civil officers with the work of moral propagandism in addition to their usual administrative duties. Kautilya [I. 16] speaks of three grades of Dūtas.

<sup>3</sup> Ladhā (G.), but K. has gadadhā = San. gādhā, i.e., profound, deep, which Bühler connected with Pāli gādhati, "to stand fast."

<sup>4</sup> Lahuka: the word also occurs in R.E. XII.

<sup>5</sup> The Kālsī text uses the word pine for piye, perhaps another clerical error in the Edicts. It shows another error in repeating the word piti twice in the preceding sentence.

<sup>6</sup> The Edict curiously omits to mention poṭrā, the grandsons.

<sup>7</sup> Spakaspi yo vijaye kṣamti; ṣayakaṣi no vijayaṣi khamti (K.): spakaspi, ṣayakaṣi = svakiye, own; G. reads: "Sarasake eva vijaye," forbearance and mildness of punishment,<sup>1</sup> and that they should consider that only as conquest which is moral conquest. That is of both this world and the next. And be their pleasure in the renunciation<sup>2</sup> of all (other aims), which is pleasure in morality. That is of both this world and the next.<sup>3</sup>

i.e., if a conquest does please them (from sva + rasa, pleasure). Thus the word sarasahe has no connection with Sans. śara-śakyaḥ as supposed, nor does it mean “śarākaṣṣiṇaṃ vijayaṇi,” a violent conquest. For spaku = svaka, cf. spagram [R.E. VI] = svargam.

<sup>1</sup> The K.R.E. I, l. 10, also insists on moderation of punishments (majham pa'ipādayemā ti).

<sup>2</sup> Hultzsich explains chati in savachati-rati as corresponding to Sans. tyakti = tyāga. K. and M. here read differently: “śavā cha ka nilati hotu uyāma-lati” (K.), “and all (their) pleasure be the pleasure of exertion” [cha ka = cha kam, same as cha as in “putā cha kam natāle chā” in R.E. IV, K.; uyāma = udyāma, same as utthāna and parākrama of R.E. VI and X]; “sava cha ka nirati hotu ya dhramarati” (M.), “and all (their) pleasure be the pleasure in dharma.”

<sup>3</sup> The Girnar text adds at the end on the right side the following isolated sentence: (sa)rvasveto hasti sarva-loka-sukhāharo nāma, “the perfectly white Elephant, bringing happiness, indeed, to all the world.” The passage probably “refers to the lost figure of an elephant, such as is incised on the rock at Kālsi with the legend, Gaj(o) tume, i.e., gajot-tama, ‘the most excellent elephant.’ At Dhauli an elephant carved in relief looks down upon the inscriptions. The elephant was a familiar symbol of the Buddha” [V. Smith’s Asoka, 3rd ed., p. 189 n.]. The word seto also occurs at the end of R.E. VI of the Dhauli text.

Below the Girnar inscription, on the left side, Hultzsich has traced two defaced lines, and the words teṣa and p'pā in the first and second line respectively. He suggests these might be connected with the well-known Buddhist formula—hetum teṣāṃ Tathāgato hyavaḍat | teṣāṃ cha, etc. [Corpus, p. 26].

XIV

[GIRNAR]

These religious edicts have been caused to be inscribed by His Sacred and Gracious<sup>1</sup> Majesty the King in abridged,<sup>2</sup> medium,<sup>3</sup> or expanded form.<sup>4</sup>

Nor, again,<sup>5</sup> was all executed (or suitable)<sup>5</sup> everywhere.<sup>6</sup> Vast is the conquered country,<sup>7</sup> much is already written and much shall I get written.<sup>8</sup> There is also here something<sup>9</sup> said again and again for the sweetness<sup>10</sup> of the topics concerned that the people should act accordingly.

There sometimes might also be writing left unfinished,<sup>11</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The Shah. text uses the strange form Prisina for Priyadasinā, which is nowhere to be found in the Edicts. Thus it may be taken as another clerical error of the Edicts, especially when the standing form in this text is Priyadraśisa [cf. R.E. II].

<sup>2</sup> The Maski Edict is perhaps an instance of an abridgment.

<sup>3</sup> E.g., omission of certain words in the Shah. text of R.E. XIII (see note) : S. also omits the word for "majhamena" in other texts.

<sup>4</sup> E.g. addition of several words in the Rūpnath text of M.R.E. I not to be found in other texts ; also in the Shah. text of R.E. VI.

<sup>5</sup> cha ; hi in other texts, in which case the translation will be : "For all was not executed everywhere." Hultzscht translates the word ghaḥitam by "suitable."

<sup>6</sup> No copy of the Minor Rock Edicts, for instance, has been executed in places where the fourteen rock edicts appear. At Sopara, again, only the eighth edict was perhaps incised, of which but a few words have been traced.

<sup>7</sup> Implying that his dominion was so extensive that his Edicts could not be inscribed in all its different parts or provinces (na cha sarvaṃ sarvata ghaḥitam).

<sup>8</sup> E.g., the Pillar Edicts issued later. K. has : "Much shall I also get written constantly—lekhāpeśāmi cheva nikyaṃ."

<sup>9</sup> "Asti cha eta kaṃ . . .," which Hultzscht translates as "and some of this has been stated again and again." In other versions there is atra instead of eta kaṃ. This suggests that eta kaṃ should correspond to atra kimchit.

<sup>10</sup> E.g., the repeated definitions of the Dharma in the Edicts ; evam = uktam ; lapitam (S.).

<sup>11</sup> Tatra ekadā ; S. has : "so siya va atra kiche," i.e., there might also be here something (incompletely written).

taking into account the locality,<sup>1</sup> or fully considering the reasons,<sup>2</sup> or by the lapses<sup>3</sup> of the scribe.<sup>4</sup>

E. THE SEVEN PILLAR EDICTS

I

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King :
By me consecrated twenty-six years was this religious edict<sup>5</sup> caused to be inscribed. Both this world and the next are <sup>1</sup> E.g., the two Kalinga Edicts are substituted for R.E. XI, XII and XIII at Dhauli and Jaugada. The original expression used here is—desam (diṣā in Kālsi text) va sachhāya (or saṃkhēye). Cf. Sutta Nipāta [i. 12, 208]: Samkhāya vatthūni, "having pondered over things." Kautilya has also the phrase, Samkhyātārtheṣu karmasu niyuktā ye, i.e., "those who understand their duties" [I. 8]. "Diṣā" in K. in the sense of "deśa" must be a clerical error for "deśam." Cf. disāsu in P.E. VII, l. 27. Senart took sachhāya or saṃkhaya to be connected with Sans. saṃkṣepa or abridgment, and the meaning of the passage to be "by reason of mutilation of a passage." Bühler translated it as "It is due to lack of space." For saṃkhaya from saṃkṣepa or abridgment, cf. "Mūlam papañchasamkhāyā," "let him completely cut off the root of prapañcha or delusion" [Tuvaṭaka Sutta, v. 2].

<sup>2</sup> Kāraṇam [haraṇa (S.), kālanam (K.)] va alochetpā [alocheti (S.), alochayitu (K.)]; the word alochetpā is taken here in the sense of ālochya, deliberating. But some take it in the sense of the word "alochayisu," as used in R.E. IV [hīni cha mā alochayisū (Dh.) = that they might not countenance decrease]. Hence Hultzsch translates the whole passage thus: "either on account of the locality, or because my motive was not liked." Taking the word sachhāya in the sense of abridging, the translation would be: "myself having deleted one passage, and not finding good reason for another." To this Woolner rightly objects, saying that "the king's subordinates would hardly be allowed to dislike his motives, and omit passages as they pleased" [Asoka Text and Glossary, p. 138].

<sup>3</sup> Some of these lapses have been already noticed. This Edict shows that the whole series of the Rock Edicts was definitely closed by Asoka without allowing the possibility of further additions.

<sup>4</sup> S. has the form dīpikarasa.

<sup>5</sup> The series of Pillar Edicts was issued in 244 B.C. This date is repeated in P.E. IV, V (twice), VI and VII. The text adopted for the translation of the Pillar Edicts is that of the Delhi-Topra Pillar.

difficult of attainment<sup>1</sup> except by utmost love of Dharma,<sup>2</sup> utmost self-examination,<sup>3</sup> utmost obedience, utmost dread,<sup>4</sup> and utmost enthusiasm. But, indeed, by my religious instruction, this regard for Dharma, as well as love of Dharma, has day by day<sup>5</sup> become grown and will grow.

And my Puruṣas,<sup>6</sup> too, whether high, low,<sup>7</sup> or of middle ranks, act according to my injunctions, and enforce their proper practice, "being in a position to<sup>8</sup> recall to duty the fickle-minded." Thus also are my Anta-mahāmātras doing.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Dusam̐paṭipādāye = duḥ-sam̐pratipādyam. But this derivation is dismissed as phonetically inadmissible by Michelson [JAO 5, 46. 259]. Hultzsch [Corpus, p. cxxii] considers it as a future passive participle in -ya like dekhiya, or āvāsaya.

<sup>2</sup> Agāyā dhamma-kāmatāyā; cf. dhamma-kāmatā as used in R.E. XIII.

<sup>3</sup> Palikkhāyā = Parikṣayā. The need of pachchavekkhana or self-examination is emphasised in the Rāhulovāda Sutta cited in the Bhabru Edict.

<sup>4</sup> I.e., dread of sin. <sup>5</sup> Suve suve; cf. Sanskrit suah = to-morrow.

<sup>6</sup> Also used in P.E. IV and VII.

<sup>7</sup> Gevayā connected by Bühler with gevekā from root gev, "to serve," like sevakāḥ = menials, subalterns, lowly ones.

<sup>8</sup> Thus translated by Woolner; samādāpayati is to investigate; Pāli samādāpeti = instigate, encourage. Hence Hultzsch translates it as "to stir up."

<sup>9</sup> The principles of Asoka's Frontier Policy and administration are set forth in the Kalinga Rock Edict II. It may be noted that the Anta-Mahāmātras are not mentioned in K.R.E. II, although there was occasion to do so. Probably they were created later than that Edict. Kautilya [II. 4] knows of Anta-pālas whom he includes among the heads of eighteen administrative departments or tirthas [I. 12]. The term Anta-mahāmātras is generally rendered as "wardens of the marches" (Bühler), "overseers of the frontier provinces" like Charlemagne's Markgrafen (Woolner), or "Mahāmātras of the Antas or Borderers" (Hultzsch). These Mahāmātras might be very properly taken to be the Mahāmātras who were deputed to work among the Antas such as those mentioned in M.R.E. I, R.E. II, and R.E. XIII, in prosecution of Asoka's Dharma-vijaya (R.E. XIII), or humanitarian missions (R.E. II). Since the institution of this special class of officers or Mahāmātras is referred to for the first time in this Pillar Edict, this Edict may be well taken to have been later in time than the Rock Edicts II, V and XIII, where their functions, and the functions of the Dharma-

And my injunction, too, is as follows: maintenance by Dharma, regulation by Dharma, causing happiness by Dharma, and protection by Dharma.<sup>1</sup>

II

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King: Good is Dharma. But what<sup>2</sup> does Dharma include? (It includes) freedom from self-indulgence,<sup>3</sup> abundance

mahāmātras in general are mentioned. The definition of the functions evidently led up to the creation of the appropriate functionaries, as referred to in P.E. I. In this view of the Anta-mahāmātras, it is also clear that, as their work lay outside the empire, they are here distinguished from the Puruṣas whose work lay within the empire. Lastly, it may be noted that, akin to the Anta-mahāmātras must have been the dūtas of R.E. XIII, who were also sent out to distant and foreign countries for welfare work under Asoka's scheme.

<sup>1</sup> As indicated in K.R.E. II, Asoka's gift of protection or freedom to the frontier peoples was conditional on their observance of piety. Hultzsch, however, translates this as "to guard (their speech) according to morality," comparing goti with the expression vachigutī, vachagutī of R.E. XII.

<sup>2</sup> Kiyam = kiyām.

<sup>3</sup> Apāsinave; from apa (or alpa) + āsinavam. Āsinava is called pāpa, sin, in P.E. III. The word āsinava is derived in two ways: (1) from āsnava from ā + root snu; cf. Jain word aṇhaya for sin; taṇhā, taṣṇā = triṣṇā. (2) From āsrava, from root sru, to flow, whence a flowing of the soul from the senses towards their objects; the Sarva-darśana-saṃgraha defines it as "a door opening into water and allowing the stream to descend through it," and "with Jainas, the action of the senses which impels the soul towards external objects." In the Āpastamba Dh. S.: [ii. 25, 19] the word is also taken to signify "external objects," yaiḥ puruṣaḥ āsrāvya, i.e., vaiḥ ākriṣya, "those objects by which a person is attracted outwards." Lists of āsravas are given both in the Buddhist and Jain texts (as already mentioned in the body of the work). Michelson considers this latter derivation as against known phonetic laws [JAOS, 46. 257].

Akin to the word āsrava is the word parisrava used in R.E. X, which is also equated with the word apunya, or sin. But the word parisrava suggests the word pariśraya, from root "śri," to surround, and hence may mean "bondage" (of sin). Cf. the expression "dharmaṃ pariśraya-vinayaṃ," "the Dharma that removes all dangers," in Tuvaṭṭaka Sutta [v. 7]. The apa of apāsinave may be taken as opposed to bahu of bahukayāne, in which case it should be translated as "few sins, many good deeds."

of good deeds, kindness, liberality, truthfulness, and purity.<sup>1</sup>

The gift of spiritual insight,<sup>2</sup> too, has been bestowed by me<sup>3</sup> in various ways, and for two-footed and four-footed beings, for birds and denizens of waters, I have ordained manifold kindnesses up to the boon of life.<sup>4</sup> Similarly, many other good deeds<sup>5</sup> have been performed by me.

For this purpose have I caused this religious Edict to be inscribed in order that ( people) might follow it,<sup>6</sup> and that it might be of long duration. And he who will follow it completely will perform a meritorious deed.

III

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King : one sees only his good deed, thinking, " this good deed has been done by me." But he sees in no wise<sup>7</sup> his sin, thinking, " this sin has been committed by me, or this indulgence of passions,<sup>8</sup> as it is called."

<sup>1</sup> Here is another definition of Asoka's Dharma.

<sup>2</sup> Chakkhudāne, first understood by Bühler in its true meaning. Hultzsch [Corpus, p. 121 n.] quotes Itivuttaka which mentions three kinds of eye, the mamsa-chakkhu, the dibba-chakkhu, and the pañña-chakkhu.

<sup>3</sup> Upon men. Asoka serves both man and beast ; cf. R.E. II, P.E. VII.

<sup>4</sup> The detailed regulations on this are the subject of P.E. V.

<sup>5</sup> E.g., the many public works of utility referred to in R.E. II and P.E. VII.

<sup>6</sup> Anupaṭipajamtu : a word frequently occurring in the Pillar Edicts.

<sup>7</sup> Mina or minā is explained by Bühler as Sanskrit manāh, no-manāh = not in the least, in no wise. But to derive mina from manāh is considered phonetically impossible by Michelson [JAOS, 46. 261]. He considers the change of a to i impossible in view of the Pāli and Prākṛit correspondents to manāh which have all a ; e.g., Pāli manā, manam ; Prākṛit maṇā, maṇam : Jaina Mahārāṣṭrī maṇāgam. So he would take nomina = no amina, and amina = Pāli aminā, " also." Cf. iminā, amunā. The translation of the passage will then be : " One does not also see an evil deed."

<sup>8</sup> Āsinave, also used in the preceding Edict.

Difficult, indeed, it is to see it fully.<sup>1</sup> But it has to be seen thus : " These are called the incentives to indulgence,<sup>2</sup> namely, ferocity, cruelty, anger, arrogance, jealousy ; and by these reasons<sup>3</sup> let me not ruin<sup>4</sup> (myself)." The following ought to be specially regarded : " this is for me for this world, that other<sup>5</sup> for me for the next."

IV

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King : By me consecrated twenty-six years was this Document of Law caused to be inscribed.

The Rājūkas<sup>6</sup> have been placed<sup>7</sup> by me over many hundred thousand lives. What is their (administration of) Law<sup>8</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Du-paṭivekhe ; paṭivekhe = Pāli pachchavekkhanam. Hultsch takes it as nom. sing. neut. = duṣprativekṣyam, " difficult to recognise." The word paṭivekkhāmi occurs twice in P.E. VI, and the word anuvekkhamāne in P.E. VII.

<sup>2</sup> Āsinavagāmini.

<sup>3</sup> Kālanena ; cf. āsinavagāmini ; the passions are the causes of one's infamy.

<sup>4</sup> Palibhasayisaṃ : Bühler connects the word with Sanskrit paribhraṇṣayisyāmi, cf. Sanskrit bhraṣṭa, fallen through sin. The sense of the passage will thus be : " even through these I shall bring about my downfall " or " may I not cause my downfall through them ? "

<sup>5</sup> Iyammana is taken by Hultsch as idaṃ anyat. For the sandhi, he instances hevaṃmeva, etc.

<sup>6</sup> See note under R.E. III. Me in this line may be taken as a genitive singular instead of instrumental.

<sup>7</sup> Āyatā = Āyutā = Āyuktāḥ, appointed, or from root yat = " be concerned for," " caring for," " occupied with " (Luders).

<sup>8</sup> Abhihāle = abhihārāḥ, occurring, as Bühler has shown, in one of the *Jātaka*s [Vol. v., p. 58, verse 143 ; ib., p. 59] in the sense of pūjā, honour, honorarium, as explained by the commentator. Cf. ahāle in M.R.E. I (Rup.). Jayaswal [JBORS, Vol. iv, p. 41] takes the word abhihāra in the sense of " attack," so that the Rājūkas would be like " Imperial High Ministers " exercising the sovereign's powers delegated to them as regards Danḍa and Abhihāra, Administration, or Peace, and War. But, as Senart has shown, abhihāla and daṇḍa are equated below with viyohāla-samatā and daṇḍa-samatā, whence abhihāla = vyavahāra, i.e., Law, while daṇḍa is Justice. Thus the Rājūkas are given independent charge of both judicial and executive functions, or rather of legislation and judicial administration.

or Justice<sup>1</sup> has been made by me subject to their own authority,<sup>2</sup> so that the Rājūkas, assured,<sup>3</sup> and without being afraid, may set about their tasks,<sup>4</sup> distribute<sup>5</sup> the good and happiness of the people of the country,<sup>6</sup> and also bestow favours.<sup>7</sup> They shall acquaint themselves with what causes happiness or misery,<sup>8</sup> and, with the help of the pious,<sup>9</sup> admonish the people of the provinces<sup>10</sup> that they may gain both here and hereafter.

The Rājūkas, too, are ready<sup>11</sup> to obey me.

They will also obey the Puruṣas who know (my) wishes;<sup>12</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Daṁḍe = daṇḍaḥ.

<sup>2</sup> Atapatiye me kaṭe, i.e., mayā ātmapatyah kṛitaḥ (qualifying abhihāra and daṇḍa).

<sup>3</sup> Asvatha, i.e., āśvastāḥ.

<sup>4</sup> Pavatayevū : Sans. pravartayeyuḥ.

<sup>5</sup> Upadahevēvū = upadadheyuḥ from upa + root dhā.

<sup>6</sup> Janasa jānapadasā ; cf. the preceding "Lajūkā me bahūsu pānasatasahasesu janasi āyatā." This shows clearly that the Rājūkas were Jānapada or provincial officers of the highest rank, to whom the king has confided lacs and lacs of his subjects, as a man confides his child to an expert nurse, as stated below.

<sup>7</sup> Anugahinevū = anugrihṇīyūḥ.

<sup>8</sup> Sukkhīyana-dukkhiyanam. This sounds like Buddhism pure and simple, which is based on the analysis of the causes of sukham and dukkham. In the Edicts the cause of suffering is sin, āsrava or parisrava [R.E. X], and that of happiness is dharma.

<sup>9</sup> Dhammayutena, taken in the same sense here as in the Maski Edict.

<sup>10</sup> Janam jānapadam, the people of the country parts, the masses, with which the Rājūkas had to deal.

<sup>11</sup> Laghamti = Sanskrit raṅghante, "they hasten, are eager" (Bühler). It might also be connected with arhanti, "must." Jayaswal [Hindu Polity, ii. 145], strangely enough, takes the sentence "Lajūkā pi laghamti paṭichalitave mam." = "And the Rājūkas disregard (laghamti = laṅghanti) my proclamations." But mam = me, accusative, not possessive, and paṭichalitave is a dative infinitive and taken by all scholars to be connected with Sanskrit paricharitam, to serve. Cf. paṭibhogāya of other texts = paribhogāya of Gīrnār text of R.E. II.

<sup>12</sup> Chhandamānāni, i.e., chhandājñāni, but Bühler construes it from chhandājñāḥ, i.e., "those who know the king's will and order," qualifying pulisāni. Regarding the Puruṣas, it is apparent that those of high rank (ukasā, P.E. I) were higher than even the Rājūkas to be able to exhort the remiss among them to duty. Bühler identifies they will also exhort those (people) <sup>1</sup> so that the Rājūkas may be able to please me.<sup>2</sup>

Indeed, just as a man, after having entrusted his child to a skilled nurse,<sup>3</sup> rests assured with the thought: "the skilled nurse will be able to keep my child well," even so the Rājūkas were created by me for the good and happiness of the country people.<sup>4</sup>

In order that these, being <sup>5</sup> free from fear, misgivings, and distracted mind, might apply themselves to their tasks, independence of the Rājūkas has been ordained by me in the matter of Law and Justice.<sup>6</sup> them with Prativedakas of R.E. VI; the Puruṣas are, indeed, more in direct touch with the king and know his mind better than the Rājūkas, and they thus resemble the Prativedakas. Both the classes of officers are referred to again in P.E. VII.

<sup>1</sup> Kāni; according to Bühler it means "some," i.e., some people among the Rājūkas or the provincials. The sense of the passage will then be that the Puruṣas by exhortations to the undutiful Rājūkas, or to the people at large, will encourage the Rājūkas to do their duty by the dharma and king. Kāni occurs in R.E. VI, Kālsī, for nāni at Gīrnār, and for ṣa or ṣe at Shah. and Mansehra. Thus it should be taken as demonstrative, "those." The singular form is kam, used in K.R.E. Jaug.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Lājāladhi in K.R.E. II. The word chaghamti is to be compared with the word chaghatha in K.R.E. II, Dh., M.R.E. Sahs., and Bairat. Thus it corresponds to Sans. śakṣante.

<sup>3</sup> Viyata, i.e., vyaktā, "wise, learned, skilful."

<sup>4</sup> Jānapadasya hitasukhāye: this expression, along with the preceding metaphor about nurse, emphasises the high status and functions of the Rājūkas, to whom the king commits vast numbers of his subjects with the same confidence as the father commits his child to an expert nurse.

<sup>5</sup> Samtaṁ; taken by Hultzsch to be a nominative singular absolute on the analogy of the forms kalamtaṁ [K.R.E. I and II], -patayamtaṁ [K.R.E. I. (J.)], samtaṁ [R.E. VI, samto (G.)] and -pajamtaṁ [P.E. VII]. Michelson, however, [JAOS, 36. 205] would take samtaṁ as an adverb, śantaṁ, "quietly." Lüders took samtaṁ to be a plural nominative on the analogy of Kālsī samtaṁ in R.E. VIII [Gīrnār samto, Sh. sato], but there it is clearly a singular nominative masculine qualifying lājā. Samta is plural in the Sahasram "ammisam devā samta" in M.R.E.

<sup>6</sup> It may be noted that the administration of justice, and specially the correction of its abuses, were originally among the duties of the

Since it is to be desired that there should be uniformity in law as well as uniformity in justice,<sup>1</sup> from this time forward<sup>2</sup> is my injunction:<sup>3</sup> "To persons confined in chains,<sup>4</sup> already judged,<sup>5</sup> and sentenced to death,<sup>6</sup> a grace<sup>7</sup> of three days has been granted by me."

(During this period of grace) either (their relatives) will, for their<sup>8</sup> lives,<sup>9</sup> persuade<sup>10</sup> those (Rājūkas) to reconsider their judgment, or, if there be none<sup>11</sup> who persuades<sup>12</sup> (them),

Dharma-Mahāmātras, according to R.E. V. But here it appears that these duties were transferred to the Rājūkas, the provincial governors. Is not this another proof of the priority of the Rock Edicts to the Pillar Edicts?

<sup>1</sup> Viyohāla (Vyavahāra)-samatā, damḍa-samatā, uniformity of laws (procedure) and punishments. Asoka makes all men equal in the eye of the law.

<sup>2</sup> Ava ite pi cha; Hultsch translates "even so far."

<sup>3</sup> Avuti = āyukti.

<sup>4</sup> Bamdhana-badhānam.

<sup>5</sup> Tilitadamḍānam, i.e., tirṇadaṇḍānam, "on whom judgment has been passed."

<sup>6</sup> Pata (prāpta)-vadhānam.

<sup>7</sup> Yote = yautakam. The word yautaka conveys also the sense of a right which convicts might claim. The Asokāvadāna represents Asoka as abolishing capital punishment altogether on having put to death a monk who happened to be his own brother.

<sup>8</sup> Tānam; cf. teṣām.

<sup>9</sup> Jivīṭāye.

<sup>10</sup> Nijhapayisanti, "will cause to reconsider, or revise." Lüders found the word nijhapana used in the technical sense in the Ayoghara-jātaka in a passage stating that "of Death's sentences there is no nijhapana, remission or revocation" [cited in JRAS, 1916, p. 120, by Thomas]. Dr. B. M. Barua cites from the commentary to show that in the case of Yama or Death, the nijhapana might come through balikamma or sacrificial offerings by which he might be induced to forgive (khamāpenti) or relent (pasādentī), while in the case of an earthly king it might come through proof of innocence by witnesses (sakkhihi attano niraparādha-bhūvam pakāsetvā pasādetvā) [Asoka Edicts in New Light, p. 77].

<sup>11</sup> Nāsantam = "not being, if there are none"; to be taken with lāni; Bühler took it as nāsyantam, "dying, about to die," i.e., nāsyamānam; Senart took it to mean nāṣa + antam, "limit of their execution." Lüders and Hultsch give the meaning adopted here.

<sup>12</sup> Nijhapayitā, while the other three versions read nijhapayitave. It means "one who persuades," and refers to the absence of his relatives to intercede on behalf of the prisoner. Hultsch remarks they (i.e., the prisoners) will give alms for the sake of the other world or will perform fasts.

For my desire is that even when the time (of grace) has expired,<sup>1</sup> they may gain the hereafter, and that various kinds of religious practice increase, together with self-restraint and distribution of alms on the part of the people.

V

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King : By me consecrated twenty-six years, the following creatures<sup>2</sup> were declared as not to be killed, such as<sup>3</sup>—Parrots, mainas, adjutants<sup>4</sup> (?), ruddy geese,<sup>5</sup> wild geese, nandī-mukhas,<sup>6</sup>

that the means of such persuasion must have been payment of ransom which is also mentioned by Kautilya [II. 36] as one of the grounds for the release of prisoners (hiraṇyānugrahena vā).

The reading nijhapayitave would make the meaning different : " If there is none to persuade (the Lājūkas)," i.e., " if the convict must die, he should try to be better off in the next world by gifts and fasts in this ! "

<sup>1</sup> Niludhasi pi kālasi, formerly interpreted as nirodhakālepi, " even in the time of their imprisonment " (Bühler), " or in a closed dungeon " (Senart). Dr. F. W. Thomas takes the word nirodha in the sense of stoppage, and kāla = maraṇa-kāla, so that the sense is : " though their hour of death is irrevocably fixed (there being no nijhati) " [JRAS, 1916, p. 123 (Thomas)]. Hultzsch, however, refers the kāla to the three days' period of grace aforesaid, and " niruddhe api kāle " in the sense of that period being ended, the Pāli word nirodha meaning end or annihilation. Cf. Patañjali's Yoga-sūtram—" yogaḥ chittavṛtti-nirodhaḥ," i.e., yoga is the suspension of mental activity.

Thus the sense of the passage seems to be that Asoka would not shut out from the practice of morality any man, however condemned, even one who is forfeiting his very life for his crimes. When his hopes are ended in this world, Asoka holds out hopes for him in the other world. For when everything else deserts the man, Dharma does not desert him and is always open to him.

<sup>2</sup> Jātāni.

<sup>3</sup> Seyathā = Sans. tad yathā.

<sup>4</sup> Alune : perhaps some kind of red bird from aruṇa, red.

<sup>5</sup> Harṇse.

<sup>6</sup> An aquatic bird mentioned in the Bhāva-prakāśa (St. Petersburg Dictionary), and also in the Therīgāthā Commentary (p. 204 of P.T.S. edition), where we have the following expression : machchha-makara-

gelāṭas (probably cranes), bats,<sup>1</sup> queen ants, terrapins, prawns,<sup>2</sup> vedaveyakas,<sup>3</sup> gaṅgāpuputakas (a kind of fish), skate,<sup>4</sup> tortoises and porcupines,<sup>5</sup> tree-squirrels,<sup>6</sup> Bārāsing stags,<sup>7</sup> bulls set at liberty, okapiṇḍas,<sup>8</sup> rhinoceroses,<sup>9</sup> white nandiyādayo cha vārigocharā, i.e., fishes, alligators, nandis, and such other aquatic creatures. (I owe this reference to Mr. C. D. Chatterjee.) Dr. B. M. Barua has, however, found me the following passage in the Jaina work, Praśna-vyākaraṇa Sūtra, I. 7, where the term nandimukha has a different meaning: "Parippava-kivamayuna-dīviya (pīpīliya) . . . namdīmuha namdamāṇaga . . ." which the commentator explains as "pāriplavāścha kīvāścha śakunāścha pīpīlikāścha (i.e., pī-pītikārakā haṁsāścha) . . . sārikāviśeṣāḥ namdīmukhāścha." Thus in this passage the terms, namdīmukha and namdamāṇa, are names of varieties of sārikā or maina rather than of any aquatic bird. These are further described as being small birds measuring only two fingers in length and accustomed to rest on the ground at night.

<sup>1</sup> Morris read jalūkā = jalaukāḥ, or leeches.

<sup>2</sup> Anaṭhikamachhe = anasthika-matsyāni.

<sup>3</sup> Sanskrit vaidarvya, from vi-darvya or vidarvī, without a hood, eel (Woolner).

<sup>4</sup> Samkuja-machhe, a kind of fish, from Sans. saṁkuch, "contract."

<sup>5</sup> Kaphaṭa-sayake, or -seyake (kamaṭha + śālyaka), tortoises and porcupines, which may be eaten according to Yājñavalkya [i. 77]. Morris takes it as from kapāta-sayyaka, "living in shells" (see Woolner).

<sup>6</sup> Paṁnasase = paṇa (leaf) -śaśa (hare).

<sup>7</sup> Simale = Sanskrit śṛimara; the word occurs in the Kauṭīliya, p. 100; also Jātakamālā, xxvi. 9.

<sup>8</sup> I.e., oke piṇḍo yeṣāṁ te, "animals which find their food in the houses," such as "cats, mice, iguanas, and mungoses (bilāla-mūsika-godhā-muṅgusā), as the term is explained by Buddhaghosa commenting on Mahāvagga vi. 17 [S.B.E. Vol. xvii. p. 70]. According to Bühler, the creature meant here is the godhā, large lizard, which was an eatable five-toed animal according to the law-books [Āpastamba, i. 17, 37; Baudhāyana, i. 12, 5; Gautama, xvii. 27; and Vasiṣṭha, xiv. 39].

<sup>9</sup> Palasate (Bühler). In the passages of the law-books quoted above, the rhinoceros figures as one of the eatable animals, whose meat satisfies the manes for an endless time when offered at the Śrāddhas [Manu, iii. 272]. Hultsch suggests palāpate = Sanskrit pārāvataḥ, turtle dove. The rhino ill precedes the birds in the list indeed!

doves,<sup>1</sup> domestic doves, and all quadrupeds which do not come into use,<sup>2</sup> nor are eaten.<sup>3</sup>

Those she-goats, ewes, and sows, whether with young or in milk, are not to be killed, as also their offspring which are within six months of age.<sup>4</sup>

The caponing of cocks is not permitted. Husks with living things therein must not be burnt.<sup>5</sup>

Forests for nothing or for violence (to living creatures) must not be burnt.

The living must not be nourished with the living.

<sup>1</sup> Seta-kapote.

<sup>2</sup> Paṭibhogam no eti. The economic use of animals is here meant, of animals yielding skins, furs, feathers, horns, teeth, etc.

<sup>3</sup> From the omission of mayūra from the list of protected creatures, we may infer that the prohibition of its slaughter as contemplated by Asoka in R.E. I did not eventually take place, and that it continued to furnish one of the delicacies for the royal table! But a similar inference from the omission of the cow in the list, as made by V. A. Smith, is untenable, because the cow had been protected by popular religious opinion long before Asoka, and would also come under the class of quadrupeds which are "not eaten" (khādiyati). The omission of mriga or antelope is perhaps due to its exemption from slaughter announced in R.E. I.

It may be noted that the Kauṭīliya [II. 26] has also a list of protected creatures (pradiṣṭābhayānām) among which are included in common with this Edict the following: haṃsa, chakravāk, śuka, śārikā, and other auspicious creatures (maṅgalyāḥ). It is interesting to find that the mayūra is also included in this list, though omitted in the Edict, together with the mriga, deer. The Kauṭīliya in a general way lays down the principle that those creatures, beasts, birds, and fishes are to be protected which do not prey upon other living creatures (appravṛttabudhānām), as also those creatures that are regarded as auspicious, maṅgalyāḥ, among which the cow would figure first. Kautīliya also generally forbids under penalty the killing of the calf, the bull, and the milch-cow even among the animals that were not protected. It is thus absurd to suppose that he does not forbid cow-killing! (vatso vṛiṣo dhenuś-chaisāmavadhyāḥ).

<sup>4</sup> Bühler quotes Gaulama [xviii. 31] to show that sacrifices of animals that have not changed their teeth were forbidden.

<sup>5</sup> Jhāpetaviye; also jhāpavivatiye. Cf. Sans. kṣāpayati, causative from kṣāyati, burns; also Sans. dhmāpita = reduced to ashes. Perhaps both forms have suggested jhāpita.

On the three Chāturmāsīs [i.e., on the full-moon day which falls before (or after) the usual season of four months<sup>1</sup>], and on the Tiṣyā (i.e., Pauṣa month) full moon, fish shall neither be killed, nor sold, for three days, viz., the fourteenth, the fifteenth, of the first, and the first of the second, fortnight, as well as on all fasting days as a rule.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Chāturmāsīsu, "at the full moon of each season," from chātur-māsī, which is thus defined by Patañjali [on Pāṇini, V. 1, 94, quoted by Bühler]: "Chatursu māsesu bhavā chāturmāsī, paurṇamāsī," "the full moon day which falls after a period of four months is called Chāturmāsī," while the Kāśikā explains that there are three such full moon days, viz., those of Āṣāḍha, Kārttika and Phālguna. Thus there was a division of the year into three seasons of four months each, at the end [(ritvante) Manu, iv. 26] or at the beginning [ritu-mukhe (Baudhāyana)] of which the Chāturmāsya sacrifices were performed by Brahmans. The three seasons were, of course, the Griṣma, summer, Varṣā, the rains, and Hemanta, winter, which respectively begin with Phālguna or Chaitra, Āṣāḍha (or Śrāvaṇa), and Kārttika (or Mārgaśīrṣa). Thus it is not clear which full moons are meant in this Edict, whether those of Phālguna, Āṣāḍha and Kārttika, or of the other series, or whether those at the beginning or the end of the seasons. Perhaps Asoka meant the former, following Manu and the Buddhist scriptures, too [e.g., Sumaṅgalavilāsini on Dīgha N. ii. 1, p. 139, quoted by Bühler, stating that the full moon of Kārttika marks the end of a season].

<sup>2</sup> Bühler shows that the fish thus got relief for fifty-six days in the year, made up of (1) six in each of the months beginning with a season, and in Pauṣa, viz., the eighth of each fortnight, the full-moon days with those preceding, and following, them, and the new-moon days, totalling  $6 \times 4 = 24$ ; (2) four in the remaining eight months, viz., the full and new moon days, and the eighth of each fortnight, totalling thirty-two days. In specifying these days for practice of abstention, Asoka only followed the popular Brahmanical practice which held the four days of the changes of the moon as sacred sabbath days, called Parvan. On the two chief Parvans, the full- and new-moon days, there were fasting and sacrifices. The Parvan days were to be marked by continence, worship, prayer, and abstention from violence even to plants [cf. "Let him not cut even a blade of grass," Viṣṇu, lxxi. 87, cited by Bühler], and observed as holidays in the Brahmanical schools [Manu, iv. 113-114]. Thus in fixing their Uposatha days, the Buddhists and Jains only took over the Brahmanical usages. Asoka also in this Edict shows respect for them. Besides the four Parvan days, the three Chāturmāsī full-moons were also holidays for Brahmans when sacrifices were performed and studies suspended. As regards the three days at full moon in Pauṣa or

On the same days, again, in the elephant-forests,<sup>1</sup> and in the preserves of the fishermen,<sup>2</sup> other classes of living creatures must not be killed.

On the eighth (tīthi) of every fortnight, on the fourteenth, on the fifteenth, on the Tiṣyā, and Punarvasu days,<sup>3</sup> on the full-moon days of the three seasons, and at festivals, bulls shall not be castrated,<sup>4</sup> nor he-goats, rams, and boars, nor other such animals as are usually castrated.

On the Tiṣyā and Punarvasu days, on the full-moon days of the seasons, and during the fortnights connected with the seasonal full-moons, the branding of horses and cows<sup>5</sup> is not permitted.

Until (I had been) anointed twenty-six years,<sup>6</sup> in this

Taiṣa, Asoka makes them sacred probably for their connection with the Uttarāyana, a great popular festival to this day. Regarding these prohibitions, it is curious to note that they follow the lines laid down by Kauṭilya [XIII. 5]: "the king should prohibit the slaughter of animals for half a month during the period of Chāturmāsya (from July to September), for four nights on the full-moon days, and for a night to mark the date of his birth, or celebrate the anniversary of his conquest. He should also prohibit the slaughter of females and young ones as well as castration."

<sup>1</sup> Nāgavanasi, also mentioned in the Kauṭīliya [II. 2 and 31] together with the Nāgavanādhyakṣa, Superintendent of Elephant-forests [see N. Law's Studies in Ancient Hindu Polity, ch. iv.].

<sup>2</sup> Kevaṭabhogasi: particular pieces of water were reserved by, and for, fishermen for their own bhoga.

<sup>3</sup> If we accept Bühler's reason for the sacredness of the Tiṣyā day, we may infer that the reasons for excepting the Punarvasu day might be that Punarvasu was perhaps the birth-star of Asoka. Besides the limitation of violence against animals, the king's birthday anniversaries were to be celebrated, according to Kauṭilya, by a judicious liberation of prisoners, as noted below.

<sup>4</sup> Nilakṣitaviye from Sanskrit nirlakṣyate (referring to the absence of lakṣana or sign of sex). Gone = bulls, from Sans. go = ox.

<sup>5</sup> For the branding of cows, the new-moon day of Phālguna was considered suitable by Brahmans [Śāṅkh. Gṛihya Sūtra, iii. 10, cited by Bühler].

<sup>6</sup> The twenty-sixth year is thus the current year, and not the year that has expired, since up to this time there have been only twenty-five liberations of prisoners. Thus we may take it as a general rule that all years mentioned in the Edicts are the current years of the reign of Asoka.

period, twenty-five jail-deliveries have been effected by me.<sup>1</sup>

VI

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty: By me consecrated twelve years was caused to be inscribed a body of Religious Edicts<sup>2</sup> for the good and happiness of the people that they, making that their own,<sup>3</sup> might attain to that and that<sup>4</sup> (i.e., a corresponding) growth in Dharma.

(Thinking): "thus will be (secured) the good and happiness of people," I am attending not only to (my) relatives, but to those who are near, and far,<sup>5</sup> in order that I might lead them to happiness, and I am ordaining accordingly.

Thus do I also attend to all classes.<sup>6</sup>

All sects are also honoured by me with various offerings. But that which is one's own approach<sup>7</sup> (or choice) is considered by me as the most essential.

<sup>1</sup> Probably to celebrate the king's birthday, as pointed out by V. A. Smith [Asoka, p. 207 n.] from a passage in the Kaṭṭīya [II. 36]. The prisoners to be thus occasionally liberated should be from "the juvenile, aged, diseased, and helpless, bāla - vṛiddha - vyādhita - anāthānām" [ib.]. Cf. the grounds of relief as stated in R.E. V. Good conduct in jail might also win release according to Kaṭṭīya [ib.].

<sup>2</sup> I.e., the Rock Edicts, in some of which this very date, 258 B.C., is given.

<sup>3</sup> Apahaṭā, i.e., apahṛitya or apahṛitvā, which may have the two opposite meanings of "taking away," or "giving up." Senart adopts the former, and Bühler the latter, meaning. Kern took the word to be a + pra + hṛitva = not injuring, not violating, not transgressing (Hultsch), while taṁ = the matter of the Edicts.

<sup>4</sup> Taṁ taṁ; the people will advance in Dharma according to the parts of it they accept and cultivate.

<sup>5</sup> Apakathesu = apakṛiṣtesu; Asoka serves all the peoples, relatives, the near and dear ones (specially mentioned in R.E. IV and VII), and others at a distance from him.

<sup>6</sup> Nikāyesu; the word also occurs in R.E. XIII and XII.

<sup>7</sup> Atanā pachūpagamane, i.e., ātamanah pratyupagamanam, "one's own free choice of a creed." Hultsch translates the passage differently: "But this is considered by me (my) principal (duty), viz., visiting (the people) personally." For mokhyamate, cf. mukhamuta vijay eof R.E. XIII; for "e chu iyaṁ . . . se me," cf. "esa hi vidhi yā iyaṁ" in P.E. I. For the duty of visiting the people, we may

By me consecrated twenty-six years was this Religious Edict caused to be inscribed.

VII <sup>1</sup>

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King : The kings,<sup>2</sup> who were in the past ages, wished thus : How should the people grow with the growth of Dharma ? But the people were not advanced with a corresponding <sup>3</sup> advance in Dharma.

Concerning this,<sup>4</sup> His Sacred and Gracious Majesty thus saith : This occurred to me : In ages past did thus wish the kings : How should the people advance with enough advance in Dharma ? But the people were not advanced with enough advance in Dharma. By what means, then,<sup>5</sup> might the people be made strictly to follow it ?

By what means might the people be made to advance with enough advance in Dharma ? By what means could I uplift them <sup>6</sup> with advance in Dharma ?

Concerning this, His Sacred and Gracious Majesty thus saith : This occurred to me : Religious messages shall I compare the dharmā-yātrā of R.E. VIII. The expression "atanā pachūpagamane" may be compared with atana āgācha of the Rummindei and Nigliwa Pillar Inscriptions.

<sup>1</sup> This Edict was found only on one pillar, that of Delhi-Topra, and part of it is inscribed round the shaft and was formerly taken as a separate Edict.

<sup>2</sup> Lājāne : the plural shows that Asoka here refers to at least two of his predecessors without mentioning their title Devānām-priya which is mentioned in R.E. VIII. Asoka credits his predecessors with a desire for the moral well-being of the people, but takes credit to himself for devising the proper means of realising that desire. Asoka's means are two-fold : (1) Dharmaśrāvaṇāni (religious messages), and (2) Dharmānuśāsti (religious instructions or injunctions). The means are executed by his agents, the Puruṣas, the Rājūkas and the Dharma-Mahāmātras.

<sup>3</sup> Anulupāyā (Sans. anurūpa) = in proper proportion.

<sup>4</sup> Etam = atra, as translated by Hultzsch both here, and in R.E. XI. Shah.

<sup>5</sup> Kināsu = Pali kenassu and Sans. kena-svit (Hultzsch).

<sup>6</sup> Kāni ; cf. kāni in R.E. VI, Kālsi, P.E. IV, V and VI.

cause to be proclaimed<sup>1</sup>: religious injunctions<sup>2</sup> shall I enjoin: the people listening to this will follow strictly, will uplift itself, and will be made to advance considerably with advance in religion.

For this purpose have the religious messages been proclaimed by me, various kinds of religious injunctions have been ordained, so that my Puruṣas, too, appointed in charge of many people<sup>3</sup> will expound<sup>4</sup> and expand<sup>5</sup> (these). The Rājūkas, too, in charge of many hundred thousands of lives,—these, too, have been instructed by me: “thus and thus exhort ye the people who are devoted to Dharma.”<sup>6</sup>

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King: By me perceiving this have indeed been set up pillars of

<sup>1</sup> Dhamma-sāvanāni sāvāpayāmi. Hultsch translates: “I shall issue proclamations on Morality” and takes the M.R.E. as examples of dhamma-sāvanāni by taking as equivalents the expressions “iyam sāvane sāvāpīte” [Brahm.] and sāvane kaṭe of Rūpnath.

<sup>2</sup> Dhammānusathini; instructions in morality which Asoka imparted personally [R.E. VIII], as well as through his officers in general [R.E. III], and, later on, by special officers, the Dharma-Mahāmātras [R.E. V]. This moral instruction or propagandism was carried on both within and outside the empire, among both subject and protected or independent and foreign peoples [R.E. V and XIII]. The propaganda in foreign countries had resulted in the establishment of the means of treatment of diseases (hospitals) of both men and cattle [R.E. II].

<sup>3</sup> Yathā pulisā pi bahune janasi āyatā. Instead of yathā, Dr. D. R. Bhandārkar reads vyuthā, the notorious word of M.R.E. I. This reading is also accepted by V. A. Smith. But the sense of the passage does not suffer without it. We have already seen how high were the status and functions of the officers called Puruṣas [see note under P.E. IV], and here we have a further fact to show it, viz., their authority over multitudes of people. P.E. I also refers to puruṣas of high rank (ukasā).

<sup>4</sup> Paliyovadisamti from pari + ava + vad, to instruct.

<sup>5</sup> Pavithalisamti = pravistārayiṣyanti.

<sup>6</sup> Janam dhammayutam. This passage helps to clear up further the meaning of the word dhamma-yuta in the Edicts. It also repeats the statement in R.E. V that the virtuous section of his people claimed the special care of the king and received his moral ministrations.

piety,<sup>1</sup> Dharma-Mahāmātras created, and Religious Edicts composed.<sup>2</sup>

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King :
On the high roads, too, banyan trees were caused to be planted by me that they might give shade to cattle and men, mango-gardens<sup>3</sup> were caused to be planted, and wells were caused to be dug by me at each half-kos,<sup>4</sup> rest-

<sup>1</sup> Dhamma-thambhāni ; cf. silā-thambhāni and silā-phalakāni below, silā-thambhasi [Rūp. R.E.], silā-thambhā [Sa. R.E.], silā-thabhe [Rum. P.E.], thube [Nig. P.E. = Pāli thūpa, Sans. stūpa] and silā-thubhe or thube (stūpa) [Rūp. R.E. ; Hultzsch reads it as sālāthabhe = pillar].

The reference to the Pillar Edicts is thus a reference to the first six of these, as pointed out by Bühler. Dr. B. M. Barua, however, has shown that the expression dharmastambhas might be regarded as analogous to Dharma-Mahāmātras, i.e., as monuments of Dharma. The pillars of dharma should be contrasted with the pillars of victory (vijaya-stambha) [Asoka Edicts in New Light, p. 54]. These pillars or monuments might then include the Asokan topes with which, as stated in the Divyāvadāna, pp. 389-97, the emperor marked out the holy places for convenience of visitors.

<sup>2</sup> These are the three things, among others, which Asoka claims as his own innovations. The word for "composed" is kaṭe, also used in the Rūpnath text of M.R.E. I.

<sup>3</sup> Ambāvadikyā, i.e., āmravāṭikā. The Queen's Edict has the form ambā-vaḍikā. Ambā=āmra but vaḍikā is the Prākṛit equivalent of Sans. vṛṭikā (= vṛiti, "a hedge") and not of Sans. vāṭikā which presupposes the form vartikā [see Hultzsch, Corpus, p. 134 n].

<sup>4</sup> Adhakosikyāni. A krośa=8000 hastas=4000 yards=less than three miles. The objection that the wells would thus come too close to one another may be answered by the statement of Strabo that Chandragupta's mile-stones were set up at intervals of 10 stadia=2022½ yards=about ½ kos. Adha must be distinguished from aṭha=8 of Rummindei Pillar Inscription and may be compared with the form diyadhiya of Maski Edict and Sahasram. If the expression is taken to mean 8 krośas, the intervals between the wells will be too distant. Yuan Chwang measured 1 yojana=8 krośas, and his yojana meant distances of 5, 10, and 14 miles=100 li. The third yojana of 14 miles was applied by Yuan Chwang to his Indian travels, as shown by Fleet [JRAS, 1906, p. 1011] who explains the literal sense of a yojana as yoking distance up to which a fully-loaded cart can be drawn by a pair of bullocks. It was also, according to Yuan Chwang [Watters, I. 141 f.], a day's march for the royal army. The yojana in the ancient books is measured in terms of hastas, from which has been derived its measurement in yards and miles.

houses<sup>1</sup> were caused to be built; many watering stations<sup>2</sup> were caused to be established by me, here and there, for the comfort of cattle and men. Slight comfort, indeed, is this. For by various kinds of facilities for comforts, the people have been made happy by previous kings,<sup>3</sup> and myself. But, that the people might strictly follow the path laid down by Dharma, was this thus<sup>4</sup> done by me.

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King :

<sup>1</sup> Nimsiḍhayā = Sanskrit niṣadyā. The Khāravēla inscription, l. 15, uses the expression, Arahata-nisidiyā-samīpe. Cf. the expression vāṣa-niṣidiyā (rain-retreat) in the Nāgārjunī Hill Cave Inscriptions. Luders, strangely enough, takes the word to mean "steps (down to the water)" from Sans. niśrayaṇi, and śliṣṭi. Hultzsch also follows Luders, but derives the word from Sans. niśliṣṭakā. But, as Woolner rightly remarks, "the real need of the pedestrian in India, however, is not steps to walk into a well or a river, but a shady place to sit down in, and water to drink, and these more frequently than every eight kos" (as interpreted by some) !

<sup>2</sup> Āpānāni.

<sup>3</sup> Asoka does not claim credit for these various public works of utility. These were equally promoted by his predecessors. The Brahmanical works on Law and Polity include it among the duties of kings. The Sukraniti mentions the names of the classes of trees to be planted along the roads, and in the villages and forests, and of the sources of water-supply—kūpa, vāpi, puṣkarinī and taḍāga. The Kautiliya [II. 1] enjoins the king to provide sources of water-supply (setu), land-routes, and waterways (vāri-sthala-paṭha), groves (ārāma) and the like, and to maintain the public works of previous kings (pūrvā-kṛitān) and create new ones [Ib.]. In the Samyutta Nikāya [i. 5, 7] also we find it stated that "folks from earth to heaven go" who are :

"Planters of groves and fruitful trees,
And they who build causeway and dam,
And wells construct and watering-sheds
And (to the homeless) shelter give."

<sup>4</sup> Etadathā me = etad yathā me (Michelson), but Hultzsch construes atha = arthāya. But artha in the Edicts is invariably atha and not atha, while the dative is athāye. Hultzsch cites in support of his view a[th]āye of l. 31 of this edict, but the reading is doubtful, Bühler read it as athāye [JAOS, 46. 263]. Hultzsch also relies on the Girnar form etāya athā (i.e., arthāya) in R.E. XII, l. 9, but in the Pillar Edicts the dative termination is always -āye. Girnar yathā = Kalsi athā in the same Edict.

Those <sup>1</sup> my Dharma-Mahāmātras, too, are employed in various kinds of business, in matters of royal favour, both of ascetics and of house-holders <sup>2</sup>; among all sects also are they employed. In the business of the Samgha, too, has it been ordained by me that these shall be employed: similarly has it been ordained by me that these shall be employed among Brāhmaṇa and Ājīvika <sup>3</sup> ascetics; among Nirgranthas, too, has it been ordained by me that these shall be employed; among the various sects, too, has it been ordained by me that these shall be employed. There were such and such Mahāmātras specially (employed) for such and such (sects), but my Dharma-Mahāmātras <sup>4</sup> were employed among these (congregations), as also among all other sects.

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King: These, and many other principal <sup>5</sup> officials, are also occupied with the distribution of charities of myself and the queens.<sup>6</sup> And in all my female establishments, both here <sup>7</sup> and in the provinces,<sup>8</sup> they are carrying out in various kinds of forms

<sup>1</sup> Te, i.e., those Dharma-Mahāmātras who are referred to above in l. 13 of the text.

<sup>2</sup> Pavajitānaṃ cheva gihithānaṃ; in the same context in R.E. V occurs the expression "Brāhmaṇa-ibhyeṣu," where the word ibhyeṣu has been taken to mean householders, and not the Vaiśyas merely.

<sup>3</sup> While Asoka shows so much concern for the Ājīvikas and even builds them special cave-dwellings, Kauṭilya, with his usual Brahmanical orthodoxy, brands them along with the Buddhists (Śākyā-jīvakādīn), as being unworthy of entertainment at any ceremony connected with the gods or ancestors [deva-pitṛi-kāryeṣu in III. 20].

<sup>4</sup> These Dharma-Mahāmātras were thus different from, though associated with, the Mahāmātras referred to in the sentence previous.

<sup>5</sup> Mukhā, "heads of departments." Some of these are mentioned in R.E. XII. The term Mukhya in this sense occurs in the Smṛitis [e.g., Yājñavalkya, xvii. 20]. Dr. Thomas, however, takes the word in the sense of "heads of accounts or revenue" [JRAS, 1915].

<sup>6</sup> Devinām.

<sup>7</sup> I.e., at Pāṭaliputra, as stated in R.E. V.

<sup>8</sup> Disāsu: this settles the meaning of the word disā or desam used in R.E. XIV, which indicates the locality and not "a part." The corresponding word for disāsu in R.E. V is bahireṣu cha nagareṣu. It is noteworthy that the members of the royal family were not all settled in the capital city, Pāṭaliputra, only: some of them settled down at the provincial towns too. This shows that the royal family was a large one, with its branches or ramifications.

such and such measures productive of happiness.<sup>1</sup> (And besides the queens and myself) has it also been ordained by me that they shall be occupied with the distribution of charities of my sons<sup>2</sup> and other queens' sons<sup>3</sup> in order (to promote) noble deeds of Dharma,<sup>4</sup> and strict adherence to Dharma.<sup>5</sup> And these are the noble deeds of Dharma and adherence to Dharma whereby the following,<sup>6</sup> viz., compassion, liberality, truthfulness, purity, gentleness, and goodness of the people will thus increase.

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King : Whatever good deeds have been done by me,<sup>7</sup> these the people have followed and these they will imitate and thereby they have been made to progress, and will be made to

<sup>1</sup> Tuṣṭhāyatanāni = tuṣṭāyatanāni, sources of contentment, opportunities for charity (Bühler). The verb used here is "paṭi . . ." which Bühler restored as "paṭipādayanti" = "they point out," but I take it in the sense of "execute, carry out." Hultzschr, however, would restore the word as paṭivedayanti in the sense of "reporting." Cf. paṭivedakū of R.E. VI, and praṭivedayanti, [ib.] Jaugada text.

<sup>2</sup> Dālakānaṃ.

<sup>3</sup> Devikumālānaṃ; according to Bühler, these Kumāras or princes were not the sons of Asoka's queens or devīs, but of the queens and devīs of his father, and were hence his step-brothers [Ep. Ind. ii., 276]. The word devī for queen is also used by Kauṭilya [I. 10], as well as the word kumāra for a prince [I. 20].

<sup>4</sup> Dharmāpadāne. Childers points out that the thirteenth book of the Khuddaka Nikāya, comprising tales of good deeds of Buddhas and Arhats, is called an Apadāna (Sans. avadāna).

<sup>5</sup> In R.E. V, while the royal harem is specified as one of the spheres of the work of the Dharma-Mahāmātrās, some of the details of such work are given here. Kauṭilya [I. 20] acquaints us with the administrative arrangements for the royal harems of the day. The antahpura with its inmates, the avarodhas, was placed under a military guard, the antarvaśika-sainya, and civil officers, the abhyā-gārikas, comprising both males and females, who regulated all communications between the harem and the outside world. It may be noted that Kauṭilya does not permit the munda and jaṭila ascetics (probably the Buddhists and Jains) any access to the harem. The officers in charge of the harems are called Strī-adhyakṣa-mahāmātrās in R.E. XII. Kauṭilya calls the chief officer of the harem Antarvaśika [V. 3].

<sup>6</sup> Another definition of Asoka's Dharma.

<sup>7</sup> Mamiyā. With Asoka, "example is always better than precept."

progress in obedience to parents, teachers, in reverence for age, in proper behaviour towards Brāhmaṇa and Śramaṇa ascetics, the poor and the miserable,<sup>1</sup> even towards servants and dependents.

Thus saith His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King : This advance in Dharma of the people has been promoted only by two ways, by regulation of Dharma, and by inner meditation.<sup>2</sup> But of these (two), regulation of Dharma is of little effect,<sup>3</sup> but by inner meditation (Dharma may be promoted) greatly. The regulation by Dharma is this that by me is thus ordained that such and such creatures are not to be killed, as well as many other regulations of Dharma,<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Kapana-valākesu, a new expression in the Edicts.

<sup>2</sup> Nijhatiyā, also used in P.E. IV, where it is used once in a technical, and at another time in a general, sense. Cf. nijjhati-balam, power of thought ; Sans. nidhyapti.

<sup>3</sup> Lahu = laghu, slight, of small account, because it is something external. " The aids to noble life are all within " (Matthew Arnold).

<sup>4</sup> Asoka's dharma-niyama comprises both negative and positive precepts, prohibitions and exhortations. As examples of the former may be mentioned the following :

(1) Do not kill living beings [R.E. III, IV, XI, and P.E. VII].

(2) Do not injure living beings [R.E. IV, IX, XIII, and P.E. VII].

(3) Do not hold festive meetings with objectionable amusements [R.E. I].

(4) Do not observe social and superstitious ceremonies as bearing little fruit [R.E. IX].

(5) Do not praise your own, and dispraise other, sects [R.E. XII].

The positive precepts or exhortations, such as proper behaviour towards all relations and living beings, liberality, truthfulness, etc., have been already discussed fully.

Certain special precepts are laid down for kings, such as dharma-ghoṣa, dharma-yātrā, dharma-vijaya, dharmānugraha, dharma-dāna, dharma-maṅgala, promotion of public works of utility [R.E. II and P.E. VII], checking abuses of justice [K.R.E. and R.E. V], public instruction in morality, dharmānuśāsti [R.E. III, IV, XIII, and P.E. VII], attention to public business at all hours [R.E. VI], seeking glory or fame (yaśa and kīrti) only in the promotion of Dharma among the people [R.E. X], honouring all sects [R.E. XII and P.E. VI], and seeing to the growth of their essential elements [sāra-vṛddhi, R.E. XII], protection of lower creatures [P.E. V], etc. Most of these have been already discussed.

such as have been ordained by me. But by inner meditation, indeed, has been much promoted the people's progress in Dharma in respect of abstention from injury to life and from slaughter of living creatures.

To this end was it ordained that it may last as long as (my) sons and grandsons, or moon and sun (will be), and that (people) may follow in this path. For if one follows in this path, (happiness) in this and the other world will be attained.

By me consecrated twenty-six years was this Religious Edict inscribed.

About this<sup>1</sup> says His Sacred Majesty: This rescript on morality must be engraved where there are stone pillars, or stone-slabs,<sup>2</sup> in order that<sup>3</sup> this may be everlasting.

F. THE FOUR MINOR PILLAR EDICTS

I<sup>4</sup>

[THE SARNATH EDICT]

(Thus ordains) His Sacred (and Gracious) Majesty<sup>5</sup> . . . Pāṭa(liputra)<sup>6</sup> . . . the Saṃgha cannot be torn asunder<sup>7</sup> by any one whatsoever. Whoever,<sup>8</sup> monk or nun, breaks up<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Etam, as translated by Hultsch both here and in Shah. R.E. XI, l. 24. The word is also used in line 9.

<sup>2</sup> Silā-phalakāni, stone-tablets, referring to the inscriptions on the rocky surfaces.

<sup>3</sup> Ena, as used also in the K.R.E. I and II, Dhauli.

<sup>4</sup> The text is mutilated in the first three lines.

<sup>5</sup> Restored as Devānampiye ānapayati from Kauśāmbī M.P.E.

<sup>6</sup> Perhaps this Edict is addressed to the Mahāmātras of Pāṭaliputra, as the Kauśāmbī Edict is to the Mahāmātras of that place.

<sup>7</sup> Bhetave, i.e., bhetavyaḥ, from root bhid; cf. "bhindati." In the Pāṭimokkha there occurs the passage—"Samaggassa saṃghassa bhedāya." Buddhaghosa explains Samgha-bhedaka as "Samgham bhindati ayam iti."

<sup>8</sup> E chum kho, i.e., yaḥ tu khalu.

<sup>9</sup> Bhākkhati = bhanakti.

the Saṃgha must be made to wear <sup>1</sup> white <sup>2</sup> garments <sup>3</sup> and to take up abode <sup>4</sup> in a place other than a monastery.<sup>5</sup>

Thus should this order be made known <sup>6</sup> in the Saṃghas of Bhikṣus as well as of Bhikṣuṇīs.

Thus directs His Sacred Majesty : Let one <sup>7</sup> such Edict be with you, deposited <sup>8</sup> in the cloister of the vihāra ; <sup>9</sup> deposit ye another self-same Edict with the Upāsakas (lay-worshippers).

Those Upāsakas may come on each fast day in order to acquaint themselves with this very Edict. And on every fast day regularly <sup>10</sup> (will) each Mahāmātra go for the fast-

<sup>1</sup> Samnamdhāpayiyā from Sans. saṃnahya.

<sup>2</sup> Odātāni = Sans. ava + dāta (white).

<sup>3</sup> Dusani = Sans. dūṣyam.

<sup>4</sup> Āvāsayaṇe = Sans. āvāsya.

<sup>5</sup> Ānāvāsasi : an abode which is not fit for the saṃgha, " abhikkhuko āvāsa " as called by Buddhaghosa [Samantapāsādikā, Introduction], who also enumerates as examples of anāvāsa " chetiya-gharam (cemetery), bodhigharam (bo-tree sanctuary), sammañjani-aṭṭako (bath-house or platform), dāru-aṭṭako (log-house), pāṇiyamālo (water-shed), vachchakuṭi (privy), and dvārakoṭṭhako (towers or battlements of a town gate) " [Chullavagga, ii. 1, 3].

<sup>6</sup> Vimnapayitaviye = Sanskrit viññāpayitavyam.

<sup>7</sup> Ikā lipi, as contrasted with the dhammalipi.

<sup>8</sup> Nikkhitā = nikṣiptā.

<sup>9</sup> Saṃsalanasi ; taken by some to mean " remembrance," saṃs-maraṇam. Dr. Thomas [JRAS, 1915, pp. 109-112] takes the word to mean a place in the vihāra like a lobby or cloister where the Edict might be deposited to attract public notice. The word is used in this sense in the Vinaya [pp. 152-3 ; Chullavagga, vi 3, 4]. Thus the passage is to be translated thus : " In order that a similar Edict may be within your reach, it has been deposited in the saṃsaraṇa. Do you also deposit a similar Edict within reach (antikam) of the Upāsakas." The saṃsaraṇa, which is a part of a vihāra [where one could walk about (saṃkramana)], is thus not mentioned in the case of the Upāsakas who do not live in a vihāra. The expression—ikam cha lipim hedisam—thus means a second copy of the Edict for the Upāsakas.

<sup>10</sup> Dhuvāye = dhruvāya ; cf. dhuvam in Jaug. R.E. I, and dhuvāye in P.E. V. This passage indicates the kind of work the Mahāmātras had to do in connection with the Saṃgha and other sects among whom they were employed [R.E. V, P.E. VII].

day service <sup>1</sup> in order to acquaint himself with this Edict and understand it fully. And as far as your jurisdiction <sup>2</sup> extends, you are to get dispatched <sup>3</sup> everywhere (an order) to this effect.<sup>4</sup> In this manner, also, in all fortified

<sup>1</sup> Posathāye ; from uposatha, Sans. upavasatha, the day of fast and abstinence preceding the day of the Vedic yāgas or sacrifices called Darśa and Pūrṇa-māsa, i.e., sacrifices held on the new- and full-moon days. The upavasatha day was so called because it was believed that on that day the gods to be worshipped came down to live with (upa + vasa) the worshipper [Śatapatha Br. i. 1, 1, 7], or because the worshipper with his wife would live on that day with the god, Agni, in the room dedicated to him [ib. xi. ; 2, 1, 4]. In Vedic worship the eighth day of each fortnight was also similarly fixed as a holy and fast day along with the new- and full-moon days and the days preceding them.

On these three holy days of every fortnight, the ascetics of Brahmanical sects used to meet and hold religious discourses. This good custom commended itself at once to the Buddha, who enjoined his Bhikṣus to assemble on those days [Mahāv. ii. 1, 4], not to remain silent but to discourse on their religion [ib. ii. 2, 1]. This religious discourse was then specified to be the Prātimokṣa [ib. ii. 4, 1] which was thus held thrice every fortnight. Later, it was fixed for one day, the new- or full-moon day [ib. ii. 4, 2 ; 34, 1], and was confined also exclusively to the Bhikṣus. It was not accessible to householders (grihasthas), nor even to the śrāmaṇera, śrāmaṇerī and bhikṣuṇī [ib. ii. 11, 8 ; 36]. But except this Prātimokṣa, or the mukhya (principal) uposatha day, the other two uposatha days were fixed for general religious discourses which were thrown open to all, or the Upāsakas.

This is how Asoka can think of his civil officers, the Mahāmātras, attending on each uposatha day (anuposatham) for purposes of the uposatha service (posathāye) which must have meant the ordinary religious discourse held on the eighth and fourteenth days of each fortnight, and not the uposatha service proper, the Prātimokṣa, for which the monks alone were eligible. This distinction between the two classes of uposatha service is to be kept in view in order to understand Asoka's injunctions as following those of his religious scriptures.

<sup>2</sup> Ahāle also used in M.R.E. I, Rūpnath text.

<sup>3</sup> Vivāsayātha, taken here in the same sense as in M.R.E. (Rūpnath). Smith, following F. W. Thomas [JRAS, 1915, p. 112], now understands the meaning of the word to be "expel."

<sup>4</sup> "Dispatch ye (an officer) everywhere according to the letter of this (Edict)" [Hultzsch]. The dispatch of officers he infers from K.R.E. I, where Mahāmātras are sent out by the king.

towns,<sup>1</sup> and districts, have this order sent out <sup>2</sup> to this effect.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Koṭa = a fort or a stronghold, according to Vāstuvidyā [xi. 28]. It is curious that the terms koṭṭam and viṣaya as used in this Edict occur in some South Indian inscriptions to indicate administrative areas larger than the village (uru), town (nagara or parru), and Nadū or Kurram, but smaller than the Maṇḍala or Rāṣṭra [see my Local Govt. p. 206]. The Viṣaya is a well-known term in the Gupta Inscriptions for a District (e.g. Lāṭa viṣaya) under a Province called a Bhukti.

<sup>2</sup> Vivāsāpayāthā; the double causal is necessary to indicate that the circulation of the order was done not directly, but through the instrumentality of those who had independent jurisdictions, as pointed out by V. A. Smith. Lines 6-11 of the Edict show the means adopted by the king "for the proper circulation of his Edict among all the parties concerned. This the king tries to ensure (1) by communicating his Edict to the monks and nuns whom it chiefly concerns, and (2) by ordering that one copy of it should be retained by the Mahāmātras, and another by the lay-worshippers, to be studied by both of them respectively at the fast-day services. The two last sections of the inscription contain further provisions for ensuring a still wider circulation to the king's Edict. The preceding paragraphs had arranged for its publicity among the citizens of Pāṭaliputra. In sections I and J (i.e., ll. 9-11), the king orders the Mahāmātras of Pāṭaliputra to make it known in the district surrounding Pāṭaliputra and in the jungle tracts beyond this district" [Hultzsch, Corpus, p. 163, n. 10]. Hultzsch, however, has now changed his mind regarding the meaning of the last two sections, which he now takes to mean: "expel (vivāsayaṭha) ye (schismatic monks and nuns)" and "issue ye orders to expel (vivāsāpayāthā) (schismatic monks) or nuns" [ib. Corrigenda, p. 259].

<sup>3</sup> This Edict and the Pillar Edicts at Kauśāmbī and Sanchi form a group by themselves by their reference to the common subject of schism in the Saṅgha, and to the king's measures to prevent and punish it. In these Edicts, Asoka appears in the rôle of the "Head of the Church and Defender of the Faith," as it were, but it must be noted that this rôle was not assumed by Asoka by an autocratic exercise of his sovereign powers, but was forced on him by the injunctions of the very faith he followed. Indeed, Asoka's attitude towards schism is determined and dictated by the Buddhist canonical law on the subject. This law seems to have developed by stages which may be traced in some of the sacred texts of early Buddhism.

These texts describe different degrees in the offences leading up to schism, as well as degrees in their punishments. The Mahāvagga [x. 1, 6, etc.], for instance, mentions in an ascending order differences among the members of a Saṅgha as "altercation (bhaṇḍanam) contention (kalaha), discord (vigraha), quarrel (vivāda), division (saṅghabheda), disunion (saṅgharāji), separation (saṅghavavattthānam), and schism (saṅghanānākaraṇam) or dissolution of the Saṅgha." Again, in Chullavagga, vii. 5, disunion (saṅgharāji) is distinguished from schism proper (saṅghabheda). Disunion can happen only in smaller Saṅghas of members numbering from four to nine, while schism means a break-up of a Saṅgha of more than nine members. It is caused by a difference of opinion on eighteen points concerning (a) what is or what is not Dhamma, (b) what is or what is not Vinaya, (c) what has or has not been (i) taught and spoken, (ii) practised, and (iii) ordained by the Tathāgata, and (d) offences and rules regarding them [ib. vii. 5, 2; Mahāv. x. 5, 4, 5]. The same points are mentioned again in Chullav. iv. 14, 2, as creating a Vivāda, but a distinction is made between Vivāda and Saṅghabheda. In a Vivāda, the point at issue was to be decided finally by the Saṅgha, and there the matter must rest. But sometimes a difference of opinion may be pressed too far, either honestly, or with an evil intention, knowing that it would in either case result in the saṅghabheda. The intention to cause a saṅghabheda is absent in a vivādādhikaraṇa.

There were also certain legal restraints imposed upon the attempts at causing saṅghabheda. These attempts were valid only from a member of the Saṅgha who was under no disability (pakatatta), who belonged to the same community (samāna-samvāsaka), and who resided within the same boundary (samānasimāyathitā). Next, the Vivāda could not be placed before a Saṅgha of less than nine members, as already stated, i.e., the Saṅgha should be large enough to admit of four members to each side of the dispute, and of the ninth member who was the Salāka-gāhāpako. Thus to produce a schism there should be at least four regular bhikkhus to agree on the point raised, and bring it before a chapter of nine with purpose prepose to cause division, whether knowing that the point was wrong or doubtful [Chullav. vii. 5, 5], or believing it, without due deliberation, to be right [ib. 5, 6]. It appears from Chullav. vii. 5, 6 that the latter position was not condemned. Secession from conviction or conscientious objection was not condemned. There was no embargo laid on honest differences of opinion, on freedom of thought.

Along with the offences leading towards saṅghabheda or dissolution of the Saṅgha, and schism, the texts contemplate different degrees and grades of penalty corresponding to such offences. The first punishment inflicted on a schismatic is that of Nissāraṇam, or his temporary removal from the Saṅgha [Mahāv. x. 5, 14], during which he was subjected to Parivāsa, or living apart, for five or ten days, and Mānatta, or living under restraint for six days, as laid down in the Pātimokkha, Saṅghādisesa, 13. His restoration, osāraṇam, was permitted, if the accused expressed his acknowledgment of the guilt [Mahāv. ib.].

We may also note in this connection that the Pātimokkha brings the promotion of saṅghabheda under the class of Saṅghādisesa offences, i.e., offences for which atonement from beginning to end can be granted only by the Saṅgha. The offence, according to the same text, is defined as (a) causing division (bheda) in the Saṅgha that is at union (samagga); (b) persistently raising issues calculated to cause division. The offence may be committed by a single bhikṣu or by a number of bhikṣus, as his partisans, who would then be equally guilty with him. Thus though the offence against the Saṅgha is sufficiently serious, it is not visited by the extreme penalty of permanent expulsion in the Pātimokkha which may be taken to lay down the earlier form of the law. The Pātimokkha would reserve the extreme penalty for Pārājika sins, the offences against morality, such as adultery, theft, murder, or fraud (by claiming superhuman powers).

The extreme penalty for schism is, however, laid down in Mahāvagga [i. 60, 67 and 69]. It is called nāsanam, which is definitive and permanent expulsion from the Saṅgha, and is to be distinguished from (a) suspension or temporary excommunication, ukkhepanam, for a bhikṣu refusing to admit or atone for the offence committed or to renounce a false doctrine [ib. i. 79; Chullav. i. 25; 27]; and (b) temporary banishment, pabbājanam, for bhikṣus guilty of causing by their conduct scandal to the Saṅgha. Both (a) and (b) may, however, be revoked on repentance [ib.; Mahāv. x. 6].

It is difficult to see what kind or degree of schism or saṅghabheda and of the punishment of expulsion is meant by Asoka in his use of the expressions bhetave and ānāvāsasi āvāsasiye in the Edicts in question. If he was for complete and irrevocable expulsion of the heretical monks, he must be understood to have taken his stand upon the three passages of the Mahāvagga cited above, together with a fourth passage [Mahāv. iii. 11, 5] which describes as a "grievous sin" the causing of divisions (bheda) in the Saṅgha, and permits the good bhikṣu to dissociate himself from the heretics who commit this sin.

Along with the deportation of the heretical monks to non-monastic residences (anāvāsa), Asoka inflicts upon them the further penalty of disrobing them, replacing their yellow by white robes. For this punishment there is no canonical sanction, unless it is implied in the mere fact of the expulsion of the monks from the monasteries. Some of the Asokan legends, however, relate actual cases of Asoka enforcing this penal code of his Edicts against schismatics. Thus the Mahāvamsa [v. 270] relates how Asoka once "arranged an assembly of the community of bhikkhus in its full numbers" in the Asokārāma. "He then called to him in turn the bhikkhus of the several confessions, and asked them: 'Cir, what did the Blessed One teach?' And they each expounded their wrong doctrine. And all these adherents of false doctrine did the king cause to be expelled from the Order (upapabbajesi).'' In the Samantapāsādikā, Buddhaghosa records the further fact that Asoka expelled these heretical monks after giving them white robes (setakāni vatthāṃ dattvā). Thus

II<sup>1</sup>

[THE KAUSĀMBĪ EDICT]

His Sacred Majesty commands (thus). The Mahāmātras at Kauśāmbī . . . is made united . . . should not be received into the Saṅgha. Also whosoever, monk or nun, breaks up the Saṅgha, after being clothed in white garments, shall take up abode in a place other than a monastery.

once more the legends have confirmed the inscriptions of Asoka by their mention of practical application of the law of the Edicts against schism to concrete cases.

It is interesting to note in conclusion that the Buddhist law relating to schism has its counterpart in the Brahminical law, according to which mischief-makers who tried to create or foment dissensions in the village communities and assemblies were punished by banishment. It was the traditional duty of the king to uphold the laws, agreements and the constitution (samaya or saṃvit) by which the various local bodies, groups, and communities, such as Kula, Jāti, Janapada, or Saṅgha, organised and governed themselves, and to punish those who violated them by deportation [see the Smṛiti texts quoted in my Local Government in Ancient India, 2nd edition, Oxford].

Thus the spiritual sovereignty assumed and asserted in these Edicts by Asoka was not something which he had arrogated to himself as an arbitrary autocrat, but had behind it the sanction of both Brahminical and Buddhist Law [see Sukumar Dutt's Early Buddhist Monachism for a good discussion of the subject of schisms].

<sup>1</sup> This Edict is to be found on the Allahabad Asoka Pillar below the P.E. I-VI and the Queen's Edict, and hence to be regarded as later than either. The pillar was located originally at Kauśāmbī, modern Kosam, on the Jamuna river. It is identified with the Yana or forest Kauśāmbī of Pāṇini by Fleet [JRAS, 1907, p. 511, note], and placed near Bharhut by V. A. Smith [ib. 1898, pp. 507-19]. Cunningham supposed that the pillar was removed to Allahabad by Firoz Shāh who had removed the two other pillars from their original locations to Delhi which was his capital. But the supposition does not seem to be likely, for Firoz Shāh had very little to do with Allahabad which was really founded two centuries later by Akbar who might be held responsible for the removal of the pillar on which are, moreover, incised the inscriptions of his favourite Birbal, and of his son Jahangir [see Hultzsch, Corpus, p. xx].

III<sup>1</sup>

[THE SĀNCHĪ EDICT]

... (cannot) be divided. ... the Saṅgha of the monks and nuns is made united as long as (my) sons and great-grandsons (shall reign and) as long as the sun and moon (shall shine). The monk or nun who shall break up the Saṅgha should be caused to put on white robes and reside in a non-residence. For what is my desire? That the Saṅgha may be united and be ever-lasting.<sup>2</sup>

IV

[THE QUEEN'S EDICT]

The Mahāmātras of all places are to be instructed as follows at the word of His Sacred Majesty: Whatever gifts here<sup>3</sup> be of the Second Queen, whether mango-groves<sup>4</sup> or gardens<sup>5</sup> or alms-houses<sup>6</sup> or whatever else, these<sup>7</sup> must

<sup>1</sup> Samage: "united in both body and mind" (samaggassāti sahitassa chittena cha śarīreṇa cha aviyaṅkassāti attho), as explained in the Samantapāsādikā. In the Suttavibhaṅga we have the following explanation: "samaggo nāma saṅgho samāna samvāsako samāna-sīmāhiṭṭho," i.e., "what is called the united Saṅgha is made up of members living together and within the same boundaries."

<sup>2</sup> Adapted from the translation by Hultzsch. It may be noted that true to his own plans as stated in R.E. V, and repeated in P.E. VII, Asoka appointed Mahāmātras in charge of the Saṅghas of different sects, and, therefore, these three Edicts are addressed to them, and not to the Saṅgha, as the Bhābra Edict is, although the Edicts deal with matters affecting the Saṅgha.

<sup>3</sup> Hetā, atra, probably in Pāṭaliputra.

<sup>4</sup> Ambā-vaḍikā occurring in P.E. VII.

<sup>5</sup> Ārāma (ālame).

<sup>6</sup> Dāna-gahe. These are the concrete examples of the gifts, dānavisarga, of the king and his queens as alluded to in P.E. VII.

<sup>7</sup> Nāni.

be reckoned <sup>1</sup> as of that Queen. [This is the request <sup>2</sup>] of the Second Queen, the mother of Tivara,<sup>3</sup> Kāruvākī.<sup>4</sup>

G. THE COMMEMORATIVE PILLAR INSCRIPTIONS

I

[RUMMINDEI]

By His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King, consecrated twenty years,<sup>5</sup> coming in person, was worshipped (this spot), in as much as here was born the Buddha Śākyamuni.<sup>6</sup> A stone bearing a figure<sup>7</sup> was caused to be

<sup>1</sup> Gaṇiyati.

<sup>2</sup> Restored by Hultzsch as "[He] vaṃ [vi][na][ti]" ; vinati = Sans. viññapti.

<sup>3</sup> The name is unusual, and occurs only in a Gupta inscription as that of a king of Kosala, as pointed out by Bühler [see Fleet's Gupta Ins. p. 293].

<sup>4</sup> The name is connected by Bühler with the Vedic gotra name of Kāru.

<sup>5</sup> I.e., 250 B.C.

<sup>6</sup> Hultzsch quotes Mahāparinibbāna-sutta : "āgamiṣṣanti kho Ānanda saddhā bhikkhu-bhikkhuniyo upāsaka-upāsikāya idha Tāthāgato jāto ti," and takes the first sentence of the inscription as extending up to this word. We may compare with the words of the inscription the following words which the Divyāvadāna puts into the mouth of Upagupta in addressing Asoka on their arrival at Lumbinivana : " asmiṃ Mahārāja pradeśe Bhagavān jātaḥ " ; " in this place, O great king, the Blessed One was born."

<sup>7</sup> Silā-vigaḍabhi ; vigaḍa is from Sans. vikāṭa, a variant of vikṛita which may mean a vikāra, a transformation of any given material, a carving, or figure carved on a stone ; or vikāṭa may mean a gigantic or grotesque figure as in an arabesque, tapestry, or coverlet. Silā-vikṛita may be compared with the Pāli word pāsādavikāṭikā, a building with decorative figures. Buddhaghosa explains the word vikāṭikā as " sihabyagghādi-rūpavichitto unṇāmayo attharako," " a coverlet of linen decorated with figures of lions, tigers and the like." The Mahāvamsa [xxvii. 30] also refers to pillars bearing figures of lions, tigers and other animals, or figures of the gods (sihabyagghādi-rūpehi devatā-rūpakehi cha . . . thambhehi). The -bhi is from Sans. root bhrī, to bear, carry. Thus silā-vigaḍabhi means a stone carrying a figure, the capital of the pillar that was set up. The inscription constructed and a pillar of stone was also set up, to show that the Blessed One was born here.

The village Lummini<sup>1</sup> was made free of religious emphasises that not merely was the pillar of stone set up ; there was also constructed (kālāpita) a figure of stone to decorate it as a fitting mark of a supremely holy place. This figure of stone, śilā-vikṛita, was seen to be the figure of a horse by Yuan Chwang, and Charpentier has sought to construe the word vigaḍa itself into a horse from vigaḍa = agaḍa for agalitāśva, a vigorous horse. Sir R. G. Bhandarkar took the expression as śilā-vikaṭa (of unusual size)-bhityā (bhittikā = wall). The meaning adopted here is from the suggestion of Dr. B. M. Barua [Asoka Edicts in New Light, p. 85 f.].

It is to be noted that the ending -bhī denotes the feminine, as well as kālāpita. Cf. such feminine forms as daya, apekha, iśya, sālīka, showing the shortening of the final ā, as used in the Pillar Edicts.

Besides deriving vigaḍa from vikaṭa ≡ vikṛita (which is phonetically rather improbable), it is possible phonetically to derive vigaḍa from vigaḍha = vigarha = vigraha, while bhī might be taken to mean "also," as in Hindi bhī. Vigraha is, of course, the well-known word for a figure. The duplication "bhī chā" would then be for emphasis : "Śilā-vigaḍa-bhī chā kālāpita śilāṭhabhe cha usapāpīte ; not only was a figure of stone caused to be made—there was also a pillar of stone caused to be raised."

<sup>1</sup> This village is now known as Rummindei, but to the local people as Rupan-dehi, in the subdivision (Māl) Bithri, Jilā (district) Bithri, of the Nepal Government. I visited the place (with my pupil, Mr. P. P. Pande of Narharia, Basti, who kindly arranged for my visit) by travelling from the B.N.W.R. station, Nautanwa, for twelve miles on a pony to the village Khungai where I stayed for the night under the hospitable roof of Chaudhuri Sitaramji. Next morning (28th February, 1927), I rode through the village Padaria to the site of the Asokan Pillar about two miles distant. My photograph of the Pillar shows the fissure running along the entire length of the shaft which, according to Yuan Chwang, was caused by lightning.

Within a few paces of the Pillar stands a temple enshrining an ancient sculpture representing the Nativity of the Buddha, the figure of his mother, Mahāmāyā, standing under the sāl tree after her delivery with three attendants. The mutilated figure of the mother is now preserved and worshipped by the Hindus as the goddess "Rupam Dehi" !

In the illustration of the sculpture [Plate xiii.] (based on that of P. C. Mukharji in ASR, xxvi.), Māyādevī stands to the right in a graceful and easy posture, free from labour pains, holding with her right hand the branch of a sāl tree, and adjusting with her left hand her lower garments. The skill of a master-hand is shown in the delicate gradation of relief employed to indicate the branch and leaves of the tree, the contours of her head and hand, and her hair falling in wavelets. To her right, and below her right hand, stands a shorter female figure with her right hand raised to help her. The figure is supposed on the basis of the nativity legends of the Buddha to be that of her sister Prajāpati Gautamī, but P. C. Mukharji took it to be that of an attendant [Ib. 37]. The third tall figure is supposed by P. C. Mukharji [Ib.] to be that of Prajāpati, but by V. A. Smith [Ib.] to be a male figure, that of the god Indra who in the story receives the infant Bodhisattva on a cloth. The fourth female figure is that of an attendant. Lastly, there is the figure of infant Bodhisattva standing immediately after his birth, according to the story.

Regarding the possible age of this sculpture, Watters [On Yuan Chwang, ii. 17] remarks that "as it has not been closely examined, its age is quite uncertain." I have closely examined it, and found it to resemble the Sanchi and Bharhut sculptures on the same subject [Plate xxviii. of Cunningham's Stūpa of Bharhut]. V. A. Smith holds [ASR, xxvi. 6] that "probably the Rummidei group is the oldest known example of the nativity subject." P. C. Mukharji considers that it shows "that style of workmanship which is generally associated with the time of Asoka" [Ib. 37]. The material of the sculpture also shows it to be Asokan, because it is "the yellowish kind of stone which was employed in the edict pillars and in the two famous Yakṣa door-keepers of Pāṭaliputra, now in the Calcutta Museum" [Ib.]. The antiquity of the shrine is also shown by the fact that its original floor must have lain more than 20 feet below the present level of the ground, and the basement farther down, as calculated by P. C. Mukharji [Ib.]. Thus if this sculpture is held to be Asokan, the image of Māyādevī with her attendants and her son might be taken to be the very figure referred to in the expression silā-vigraha, and would thus help to fix the meaning of that difficult passage in the inscription. The passage would then mean that Asoka marked out the birth-place of the Buddha by two distinct monuments, viz., (1) the pillar (silā-thabhe) and (2) a sculpture representing the Nativity (silā-vigaḍa). It is to be further noted that in the legendary texts such as Asokāvadāna, there is no mention of a stone pillar set up by Asoka. They record that Lumbini Garden is the first place to which Upagupta takes Asoka on his pilgrimage, and on his arrival there Upagupta tells the king that this is the place of the Buddha's birth, and points out the particular tree under which Mahāmāyā stood when her child was born. Then the king sets up a shrine at the place, makes a donation of 100,000 ounces of gold, and departs. Watters [ib.] rightly guesses that the shrine referred to is the one now discovered, and it actually shows us the representation on stone of the tree with Mahāmāyā standing under it. Such a representation was as appropriate a monument to mark the birth-place of the Buddha as the pillar announcing it by its inscription. Perhaps it had precedence over the pillar, for it is mentioned first in the inscription as being perhaps constructed first, the erection of the cesses<sup>1</sup> and also liable to pay only one-eighth share<sup>2</sup> (of the produce).

pillar following later. That is why Asoka has mentioned the two undertakings as two distinct and separate ones in his inscription.

The inscription on the pillar has six lines, of which only the first three lines are visible and above the ground; the last two lines are now buried beneath. Probably the entire inscription was hidden from view when Yuan Chwang came to the pillar. That is why he does not mention having seen any inscription on the pillar. But the Chinese work Fang-chih does refer to an inscription on the pillar recording the circumstances of the Buddha's birth.

Lastly, it may be noted that the Pillar and the Shrine are on a mound made up of the ruins of old structures accumulating through the ages. These structures must have included stūpas, though neither Fa-hien nor Yuan Chwang has mentioned any of these. "Yet we find mention of a great tope at the spot where the Buddha was born (in a Chinese work), and about the year A.D. 764, the tope was visited, we are told, by the Chinese pilgrim known as Wukung" [Watters, ii. 17].

The Nativity of the Buddha has been naturally a favourite subject of ancient Indian sculpture. We find it in sculpture of different styles, periods, and places, Sanchi, Bharhut, Gandhara, Amaravati, and Sarnath. The oldest is that of Sanchi and Bharhut, with which that of the Rummindei Temple agrees in style and form. At Bharhut the Nativity is represented by the Descent of the Bodhisattva into the womb of his Mother whose pose and form are similar to those of the Rummindei sculpture. At Sanchi, the Nativity is no doubt represented by a variety of symbols, such as the lotus, or a bunch of lotuses set in a vase, or Māyā herself seated on a full-blown lotus or flanked by two elephants pouring water over her (mistakenly taken to be Śrī hitherto), but the representation that is most in accord with the Buddhist texts is that of Māyā exhibited in a standing posture ready for her delivery, as shown at Rummindei. It is for this correspondence of the Rummindei to the Sanchi sculpture that I have taken it to be Asokan. [On Nativity in sculpture, see Marshall's Guide to Sanchi, p. 42, and Foucher's Beginnings of Buddhist Art, pp. 20, 21, 70, and plates i, iii, iv.]

<sup>1</sup> Ubalike = udbalika (Thomas) or avavalika or apa-valika (Bühler). The word bali, as well as bhāga, is used by Kautilya [II. 6].

<sup>2</sup> Aṭhabhāgiye: this means that the usual king's share of the produce as land-revenue, which was one-fourth in Chandragupta's time, according to Megasthenes, was reduced by half for this village as the birth-place of the Holy One. Bühler took aṭha = artha, and the meaning to be "sharer in wealth, partaking of the king's bounty"; deriving his suggestion from the legend that Asoka spent at Lumbini-vana 100,000 gold pieces [Div. p. 390]. Pischel explained

PLATE XIII.

NATIVITY IN SCULPTURE IN THE RUMMINDEI TEMPLE.

II

[NIGLIVA<sup>1</sup>]

By His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King consecrated fourteen years was doubly<sup>2</sup> enlarged the stupa of Buddha Konākamana<sup>3</sup> and (by him) consecrated (twenty years), coming in person, and reverence being made, was set up (a stone pillar).

H. THE CAVE INSCRIPTIONS<sup>4</sup>

I

[NIGRODHA CAVE]

By His Gracious Majesty the King consecrated twelve years this Nigrodha Cave was granted to the Ājīvikas.

it as "with eight (aṣṭa) plots of assessable land." Kautilya uses the expression "chaturtha-pañcha-bhāgikāḥ" [II. 24] in the sense of "paying a fourth or fifth share of the produce.")

<sup>1</sup> Called by Hultzsck the Nigāli Sāgar Pillar after the name of the tank on which the Pillar stood.

<sup>2</sup> Dutiyaṃ vadhite, enlarged to double its original size, as translated by Hultzsck who compares diyadhīyaṃ vadhisati of M.R.E, Sahas.

<sup>3</sup> Name of one of the twenty-four Buddhas and the third to precede Gautama Buddha.

<sup>4</sup> These cave-inscriptions occur in the hills called Barābar, which are isolated rocks of syenitic granite situated about fifteen miles north of Gayā. The hills contain two groups of caves called Barābar and Nāgārjunī. The Nāgārjunī group is one of three caves, each containing an inscription of "Daśalatha Devānāmpīya," the grandson of Asoka. The Barābar group is one of four caves, three of which bear an inscription of Asoka dealt with here. As stated in two of these inscriptions, the name of the Barābar Hill in the time of Asoka was Khalatika Hill. According to an inscription in the fourth Barābar cave, known as the Lomaśa Rīṣi Cave, of the Maukhari Anantavarman (A.D. 6th-7th century), the name of Khalatika was afterwards changed into Pravara hill. At some period between the times of Asoka and the Maukhari king, this same hill acquired another name, viz., Gorathagiri, which occurs in two inscriptions discovered by V. H. Jackson, one "on an isolated boulder over 100 yards N.W. of the ridge which contains three of the four Barābar caves," the other "cut on the western face of the ridge itself, only six or seven yards away from the entrance to the Lomaśa Rīṣi Cave." The first inscrip-

II

[KHALATIKA HILL CAVE]

By His Gracious Majesty the King, consecrated twelve years, this cave in the Khalatika Hill was granted to the Ājivikas.

tion has the name as Gorathāgiri, and the second Goradhagiri. The name Goradhagiri, again, has been mentioned as the name of the same hill in line 7 of the Hathigumphā Cave Inscription of Khāravēla, King of Kalinga, who "in the eighth year of his reign (about 165 B.C.) had stormed by his great army Goradhagiri." Thus between Maurya and Maukhari periods, in the second century B.C., the Khalatika Hill or a part of it was known as Gorathagiri. Very probably a change of name applied to a part of the Khalatika Hill, for the name was known enough in the time of Patañjali to be mentioned in his Mahābhāṣya [I. ii. 2] as an example of Pāṇini's rule [I. 2, 52] on which Kātyāyana (about 350 B.C.), too, cites the example—"Khalatika-diṣu vachanaṁ." This sentence Patañjali explains as "Khalatika-sya parvatasya adūrabhavāni vanāni Khalatikam vanāni." Thus in the second century B.C. the name Khalatika was known as the name of a famous hill.

According to the very ingenious suggestion of Dr. A. P. Banerji-Sastri, the connection of Kharavela with the Barābar Hills has left another mark on them. The last two Asokan Inscriptions in the Barābar Caves, as shown here, and the three Nāgārjunī Inscriptions of Daśaratha mention in common the grant of these caves to the Ājivikas, but in three of these inscriptions there is detected an attempt to chisel away the word Ājivikehi, as if the name of this sect was not tolerated by somebody who was at such pains to wipe it off. Now, who was this somebody? Hultzsich conjectures it might have been the Maukhari Anantavarman who assigned one of the Barābar caves to Kṛṣṇa, and two of the Nāgārjunī caves to Śiva and Pārvatī, and for his orthodox Hindu leanings did not favour the Ājivikas. Dr. A. Banerji-Sastri puts forward a more convincing conjecture. He fastens the mischief on Khāravēla, a Jain, with the traditional hostility of his community to the Ājivikas, a mischief that was thus committed much earlier than the time of the Maukhari when the Asokan Brāhmī lipi was well-nigh forgotten. Besides, a Brahmanical Hindu would not be against the Ājivika regarded as a follower of Viṣṇu or Kṛṣṇa as shown by Kern [IA, xx. 361 f.], while he would be rather for defacing the name of Devānampiya Asoka. Nor can the mischief be traced to a Buddhist who would regard it as a sacrilege against the most honoured Buddhist king to tamper with his sacred words. Thus Dr. Banerji-Sastri finds that the mischief-maker must have been a Jain [see Hultzsich, Corpus, p. xxviii; JBORS, XI. pp. 49-52, 58-62].

III

[KHALATIKA HILL NO. 2 CAVE]

His Gracious Majesty the King being consecrated nineteen years, this cave in the very pleasant <sup>1</sup> Khalatika Hill was granted by me <sup>2</sup> against the coming of the rains.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Supiye = supriya.

<sup>2</sup> The donor may or may not be Asoka.

<sup>3</sup> Jalaghosāgamathāta = lit., "for the sake of the roar of waters." Cf. "vāṣa-niṣidiyāye," "for a shelter in the rainy season (varṣā)" as used in the three cave-inscriptions of Daśaratha.

APPENDIX B

ON THE CHRONOLOGY OF THE ASOKAN EDICTS

It is possible to trace a chronological sequence or relationship among the Edicts of Asoka from the evidence they themselves furnish. It is, however, to be noted that the date of the composition or issue of an Edict by the king must be different from the date on which the Edict was inscribed on rock or pillar in places far remote from headquarters. Thus it is quite reasonable to assume that different Edicts composed and issued by the king at different times, and exhibiting a process of evolution in the king's ideas on the subject, might be later on inscribed all together on the same remote rock or pillar on which they appear. We are here concerned with the inner chronology of the Edicts, which may be discovered from the data they themselves reveal. These may be indicated as follows :

1. Appointment of Mahāmātras : this subject is referred to in (a) the separate Rock Edicts at Dhauli and Jaugada (b) Rock Edict III (c) Rock Edict V and (d) Pillar Edict VII. The matter and manner of the reference to the same subject in these different Edicts betray their chronological connection.

In (a), Asoka announces his intention to appoint Mahāmātras for a particular purpose. It is that they may inspect the work of officers called Nagala-viyohālaka (= Nagara-vyāvahāraka) in the Dhauli text, and Māhāmātā-nagalaka (cf. Kautilya's Paura-vyavahārika, I. 12, and Nāgarika-mahāmātra in IV. 5) in the Jaugada text, l. 10], i.e., the judicial officers or city magistrates, so as to prevent "undeserved imprisonment and undeserved torture" (akasmā palibodhe va akasmā palikilese va). Thus Asoka thinks of appointing a special class (vagam in l. 24 of Dhauli) of Mahāmātras to check the abuses of his judicial officers. He also thinks that for this purpose he should send out (nikhāmayisāmi) every five years on tour (anusamyānam) these judicial inspectors of his. This rule about the quinquennial deputation and circuit of these special officers is, however, relaxed in the case of the Governors of Ujjain and of Taxila, who could make it triennial.

In (b), Asoka's intentions seem to have materialised into a standing order or a regular decree of the king, who ordains as follows :

"Everywhere within my dominions or conquered territory (vijite), the Yuktas, the Rājūka, and the Prādesika, shall, every five years, go out on tour by turns (anusamyānam niyātu, Girnar, nikhamamtu, Kalsi, and nikramatu, Shah.) as well for other business, too, as for this purpose, viz., for the following religious instruction."

It will be observed that Asoka's ideas and intentions on the subject, which were merely adumbrated or indicated in general terms in (a), have here attained to a much greater degree of definiteness and precision necessary to a government order on the subject. That (b) has thus developed out of (a) is further evident from the element common to them, viz., the rule about making the administrative tours quinquennial. This rule seems to be made absolute now, and does not refer to the exception or relaxation permitted in (a). Probably the exception of (a) did not work well and was withdrawn in the final government order. Further, while (a) merely refers to the need felt by the king for sending out, on periodical inspections of judicial administration, officers of the status of Mahāmātras, in (b) these Mahāmātras are particularised and specified. Lastly, while (b) confines the scope of the deputation to the judicial branch of the administration, (a) extends the scope so as to include the preaching of the Dharma by the king's superior administrative officers.

In (c) and (d) is to be seen a further development. Whereas (b) saddles the administrative officers with the duty of moral instruction, in (c) the duty of moral instruction is very properly thrown upon a special class of officers created for the first time by Asoka, viz., the Dharma-Mahāmātras, whose duties and responsibilities in this regard are conceived and defined on a generous scale, showing the progress the king's ideas had made since they first dawned on him when he spoke in (a). It may be noted that the checking by the Mahāmātras of injustices, such as undeserved imprisonment (palibodhe) and torture (palikilese) as mentioned in (a), is also included in the comprehensive definition of the duties of the Dharma-Mahāmātras as enumerated in (c), for they are employed to secure to deserving citizens (dhamma-yutānam) freedom from molestation (āpalibodhāye, aparigodhāya in Girnar), remedies against imprisonment (bandhana-badhasa paṭividdhānāya), and release (mokhāye).

The final stage of the development is, however, registered in (d) which makes some additions to the duties of Dharma-Mahāmātras under (c). It is distinctly stated in l. 25 of Pillar Edict VII that these Dharma-Mahāmātras were to be "occupied also with all sects" (sava-pāsamdesu pi cha viyāpatāse), such as the Buddhist Saṅgha, the Brāhmanas and Ājīvikas, the Nirgranthas, and others, different Mahāmātras thus working for different congregations. This Edict, indeed, unfolds fully the scheme of Asoka under which each class of functions pertaining to the propagation of his Dharma was administered by its own class of functionaries called by the general name of Dharma-Mahāmātras. Asoka's Ministry of Morals was made up of a large variety of officials in accordance with the variety of subjects and interests to be administered by them. Thus while (c) refers to the Dharma-Mahāmātras as a class of officers, (d) refers to the different classes under them to deal with such different interests as those of ascetics, householders, religious sects, the benefactions of the king, and of his queens, of the king's sons, and of other queen's sons and the like.

Thus the internal evidence of the Edicts (a), (b), (c), and (d) shows that they follow the chronological order in respect of their composition, as distinguished from their publication by inscription.

That the Kalinga separate Edicts are the earliest of these four is also indicated by the place of their incision on the rocks. For instance, in the Dhauili Rock, they appear separately, one on the left column of the inscribed surface, and the other below R.E. XIV. Of course, the time of the actual incision of the Edicts might have been the same, but not that of their drafting and proclamation by the king. We are here concerned, as already stated, with the chronological sequence of the contents and ideas of the Edicts.

(2) Appointment of Strī-adhyakṣa-mahāmātras: this is referred to in R.E. XII. It will be observed that in R.E. V there is the mention of the employment of the Dharma-Mahāmātras to look after the different harems of the king, of his brothers and sisters, and of his other relatives, at Pātaliputra, and in all the outlying provincial towns. The king's ideas on the subject show a further development in R.E. XII where he institutes a new and special class of officers called the Strī-adhyakṣa-mahāmātras to deal with women and the delicate task of looking after their morals.

(3) The Saṅghas and Mahāmātras: the Bhabru or the Calcutta-Bairat-Rock-Inscription is addressed by the "Māgadha King Priyadarśin" directly to the Saṅgha, but the king's messages to the Saṅgha are addressed to the Mahāmātras in charge at Sanchi, Sarnath, and Kauśāmbī. The reason is that the king's appointment of Mahāmātras to take charge of the Saṅgha and other religious sects, which we find first mentioned in R.E. V, and repeated in P.E. VII, was subsequent to the time of the issue of the Bhabru Edict. Thus the Pillar Edicts of Sanchi, Sarnath and Kauśāmbī are addressed to the Mahāmātras in charge of the Saṅghas of those places in pursuance of the arrangements mentioned in R.E. V, and are, therefore, much later in time than either Bhabru or this Edict.

(4) Appointment of Anta-Mahāmātras: Asoka's solicitude for the welfare of his Antas or frontagers is expressed in several of his Edicts, viz., M.R.E. I, K.R.E. I (separate), R.E. II, V, and XIII, but the administrative machinery for the systematic promotion of their welfare is not thought of till P.E. I which is the only Edict that tells of the appointment of a special class of officers called the Anta-Mahāmātras to deal with the Antas. Thus P.E. I must be subsequent to the Rock Edicts mentioned.

(5) Protection of lower life: non-violence towards all living beings as a principle is preached in several Edicts, viz., M.R.E. II, R.E. III, IV, IX, and XI. But administrative action to secure the observance of this principle is first seen in R.E. I, and is fully developed in P.E. V which may be regarded as the Protection of Animals Act of Asoka. It may be noted further that while in R.E. I, Asoka contemplates the abolition of the slaughter of peacocks for the royal kitchen in the near future, P.E. V, which unfolds the full extent of Asoka's measures on the subject, omits to protect the peacocks. But the deer are protected in both the Edicts.

(6) The Puruṣas: this term applied to government servants of all ranks, high, low, or middle, is not used in any of the Rock Edicts, but is thought of later, and used in several Pillar Edicts, e.g., P.E. I, IV, VII.

(7) The Rājūkas: they are merely mentioned in R.E. III, but their functions are defined in P.E. IV which indicates Asoka's administrative innovations in this regard, whereby some of the powers in respect of law and justice, which are given to the Dharma-Mahāmātras under R.E. V, are now transferred to these Rājūkas. Thus P.E. IV must be later than the Rock Edicts aforesaid.

(8) The position of P.E. VII: some scholars have recently gone against the received opinion by holding P.E. VII as prior to the Rock Edicts. They base their view chiefly on the ground that R.E. II, V, and XIII mention one of the most important innovations of Asoka, viz., his organisation of his welfare work and moral propagandism, not only in the countries on his frontiers, but also in some remote countries, while P.E. VII knows nothing of it. That this view is not tenable, and the usual view is the correct view, will appear from the following considerations :

(a) Arguments from omission or silence are notoriously unreliable, and in the present case they seem to be specially so. It is assumed that P.E. VII was meant to give an exhaustive account of all that Asoka had done as a ruler. It is a mere assumption or inference from the contents of the Edict which itself reveals nothing about the scope of its contents. The contents would rather support the assumption that the Edict, which was issued by Asoka for the benefit of his own people, was naturally meant to be a resumé of the various domestic measures he had adopted for the moral uplift of his people, and not of what he had done for foreign peoples. A reference to the sovereign's foreign policy and measures would be clearly out of place here.

(b) Accordingly, all the domestic measures mentioned in the various Rock Edicts are mentioned in P.E. VII with a degree of elaboration and generalisation that can come only after an experience of those measures seen fully in operation. This will be evident from the following examples : (i) the chief officers mentioned in the Rock Edicts, viz., the Rājūkas, Mahāmātras, and Dharma-Mahāmātras, are also mentioned in P.E. VII ; (ii) the functions of these newly-created Dharma-Mahāmātras which are detailed in R.E. V are summarised in P.E. VII ; (iii) the public works of utility and comfort for both man and beast as indicated in R.E. II are fully mentioned in P.E. VII ; as instances of generalisations and references in P.E. VII to the R.E. may be mentioned : (iv) the statement that for the spread of Dharma Asoka has had religious messages (Dhamma-sāvanāni) proclaimed (sāvāpitāni), various religious injunctions (Dhammānusathini vividhāni) ordained (ānapitāni), officers, called Puruṣas and Lajūkas, set to exhort the people to morality, pillars of piety set up, Dharma-Mahāmātras appointed, religious messages composed (kaṭe) ; (v) the statement that the progress of the people in Dharma may be accomplished in two ways, by dhmma-niyama, by regulation, and by nijhati, by reflection or inner meditation.

(c) Above all, arguments from the inclusion or omission of certain matters in the two classes of Edicts cannot be conclusive as regards their chronological relationship. Does not Asoka himself in R.E. XIV address an emphatic warning on the subject ?—" Na cha sarvaṃ sarvatra ghaṭitam," " all is not suitable in all places."

(g) The position of M.R.E. I : I agree with Hultzsch and many other scholars in thinking that this Edict is Asoka's earliest. As pointed out by Hultzsch [Corpus, p. xlv], the Rūpnath and Sahasrām versions of this Edict (a) speak of inscriptions on rock and pillar as a task which it was intended to carry out, and not as a fait accompli (lākhāpetavaya); (b) contain, along with the Mysore records, the first elements of Asoka's Dharma, which we find more fully developed in his Rock and Pillar Edicts.

As regards (a), Dr. B. M. Barua has recently taken the objection, that Asoka's intention on inscription of his messages on rock and pillar is also expressed in a passage of his so-called last Edict, the P.E. VII, which is "Iyam dhamma libi ata athi silā-thambhāni vā silā-phalakāni vā tata kaṭaviyā," "this rescript on morality must be engraved there where either stone pillars or stone slabs are available," and that, therefore, no chronological conclusion can be based on such a passage, unless it be that P.E. VII is itself an earlier Edict like M.R.E. I, presaging both the R.E. and P.E. Against this objection it may be noted that the chronological position of P.E. VII has been established already on other grounds, while, so far as this particular passage is concerned, there is a difference between it and the corresponding passage in M.R.E. I. In the former, what is to be inscribed on pillar or slab of stone is the particular Edict, "iyam dhamma libi," whereas in the latter, what is to be inscribed is not the particular Edict but, as Hultzsch points out [Corpus, p. 168 n.], "the subject-matter or contents of Asoka's proclamations, viz., the Buddhist propaganda, 'iya cha aṭhe,' instead of the usual 'iyam dhamma lipi lekhitā.'" The other point of difference is the direct reference to the inscription of the king's message on rocks (pavatisu) in M.R.E. I, and not on slabs of stone (silā-phalaka) as mentioned in P.E. VII. Perhaps a difference of meaning was intended in these two expressions: a slab of stone might be found as much on a pillar as on a rock, and in that case the passage in question in P.E. VII might refer only to the Pillar Edicts.

There are other passages in the M.R.E. which are of great significance for the entire Asokan chronology. The significance will be realised by equating these passages with certain other passages occurring in R.E. XIII. These two sets of passages are given below:

(1) M.R.E. I: Adhikāni adhātiyāni vasāni ya hakam upāsake no tu kho bādham prakamte huṣam | ekam savachharam sātireke tu kho samvachhareṃ yaṃ mayā saṃghe upayāte bādham cha me pakamte [ll. 2-3, Brahmagiri text].

(2) R.E. XIII.: L.1.—Aṭha-vaṣa-abhisitasa Devanapriasa Priadraśisa raṇo Kaliga vijita. . .

L.2—Tato pacha adhuna ladheṣu Kaligeṣu tivre dhrama-śilana dhramakamata dhramanuśasti cha Devanapriyasa.

In (1) Asoka states : " For more than two years and a half that I had been an upāsaka, lay-worshipper, I had not exerted myself well. But a year—indeed, for more than a year—that I approached the Saṅgha, I exerted myself greatly."

In (2) Asoka states : " In the eighth year of his coronation the king conquered the country of the Kalingas. Thereafter, now that the Kalingas were conquered, the king's cultivation of Dharma, love of Dharma, and preaching of the Dharma became intense (tīvra)."

The passage referring to the intensity of the king's zeal for the Dharma in (2) should be equated and considered along with the passage in (1) referring to his great exertions (bādham cha me pakamte) on behalf of the Dharma. In both (1) and (2), again, there is a reference to a stage in Asoka's life which was marked by a want of exertion and zeal for the Dharma.

On the basis of these two equations, we may obtain the following chronological results :

(1) The conquest of Kalinga took place about 262 B.C. (taking the Cambridge History date of 270 B.C. for Asoka's coronation).

(2) The conquest was preceded by a period of " more than two years and a half," when Asoka was a non-zealous upāsaka of the Buddhist Church. This takes us to 265 B.C. as the date of Asoka's entry into that Church as an upāsaka, the date of his conversion to Buddhism.

(3) After 262 B.C. began Asoka's active efforts on behalf of his new faith, and by 260 B.C., i.e., " within more than a year," he was conscious of the " results " (phale) of such efforts, as stated in M.R.E. I whose date must thus be 260 B.C.

(4) The second consequence of his efforts (parākrama) was the first of his religious tours (dharma-yātrā) to Bodh-Gayā, as stated in R.E. VIII. This took place in the " tenth year of his coronation," i.e., in 260 B.C.

(5) Issue of the two separate Kalinga Rock Edicts in 259 B.C.

(6) Issue of the other Rock Edicts, 258-257 B.C.

[illegible]

CHAPTER VIII

TEXT OF THE INSCRIPTIONS

A. MINOR ROCK EDICTS

I

[BRAHMAGIRI]

LINE

- 1 [S]uv[a]r̥ṇagirīte ayaputasa mahāmātāṇaṃ cha vachan[e] na Isilasi mahāmātā ārogiyaṃ vataviyā hevaṃ cha vataviyā <sup>1</sup>
Devāṇaṃpiye <sup>2</sup> āṇapayati <sup>3</sup>
2 Adhikāni <sup>4</sup> adhātīyāni v[a]sāni ya hakaṃ . . . sake <sup>5</sup> no tu kho bādhaṃ prakamte husaṃ ekaṃ savachharaṃ <sup>6</sup> sātireke tu kho saṃvachharaṃ <sup>7</sup> 3 Yaṃ mayā saṃghe upayāte <sup>8</sup> bādhaṃ cha me pakamte iminā chu kālena amisā samānā
munisā Jambudīpasi

<sup>1</sup> Line 1 up to this word does not occur in the north Indian versions of this Edict; the words " hevaṃ cha vataviyā " do not occur in the Siddapur version.

<sup>2</sup> The Maski version reads here : " Dev[ā]na[m]piyasa Asoka[sa]. "

<sup>3</sup> Āha or āhā in other versions.

<sup>4</sup> Sāti[ra] kekāni [Rup.].

<sup>5</sup> Rūp. Ya sumi prakāsa [Sa]k[e].

Bair. Ya hakaṃ upāsake

Sah. [A]m upāsake sumi.

Mas. Am sum[i] Bu[dha]-śake.

<sup>6</sup> The chronologically important expression ' ekaṃ savachharaṃ ' does not occur in the north Indian versions.

<sup>7</sup> A mistake for saṃvachhare.

<sup>8</sup> Upagate (Mas.); upayāte (Bair.); upete (Rūp.).

LINE

- 4 mi[s]ā devehi <sup>1</sup> pakamasa hi iyaṃ phale no hīyaṃ sakye mahātpeneva pāpotave <sup>2</sup>
 kāmaṃ tu kho khudakena pi
 5 paka[m]i . . neṇa <sup>3</sup> vipule svage <sup>4</sup> sakye ārādhetaṃ <sup>5</sup>
 e[t]āyathāya iyaṃ sāvaṇe sāvāpitaṃ <sup>6</sup> 6 . . . . . mahāt[p]ā <sup>7</sup> cha imaṃ pakame[ya t]i amāta <sup>8</sup> cha mai <sup>9</sup> jāneyu <sup>10</sup> chiraṭhitike cha iyaṃ 7 [paka <sup>11</sup>]. . . . .
 Iyaṃ cha aṭhe vadhisiti vipulaṃ cha vadhisiti avaradhiya diyadhiyaṃ
 8 [vadh]isiti <sup>12</sup>
 iyaṃ cha sāvaṇ[e] sāv[ā]p[i]te vyūthēna 200 50 6 <sup>13</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Rūp. Yā [i]māya kālāya Jambudipasi.

Sah. [Etena cha amāta] lena Jambudīpasi.

Mas. pure Jambu . . . s[i].

Rūp. amisā devā husu te dāni m[i]s[ā] katā.

Sah. ammisam-[de]vā samta munisā [m]isam-deva [katā]

Mas. [ye amisā devā husu] te [dā]n[i] misibhūtā.

<sup>2</sup> Bair. [no] hi e[s]e ma[ha]taneva chakiye.

Mas. Na hevaṃ dakhitaviye [uḍā]lake va ima adhigachh[e]yā.

<sup>3</sup> Mas. uses the significant word “dhama-yute[na]” instead of this word. The word as written here is a mistake for pakamamīṇeṇa.

<sup>4</sup> Mas. uses here the word aṭhe.

<sup>5</sup> Adhigatave (Mas.)

<sup>6</sup> Rūp. Etiya athāya cha sāvaṇe kaṭe.

<sup>7</sup> Rūp. Kh[u]dakā cha uḍālā.

<sup>8</sup> Rūp. and Sidd. use the form “atā.”

<sup>9</sup> A mistake for me.

<sup>10</sup> Jānamtu (R., S., and B.).

Mas. gives here a different reading : [khudak]e [cha] [uḍā]lake cha vataviyā hevaṃ ve kalamātaṃ bha[dak]e [se aṭhe ti se aṭhe chira-ṭhit[i]k[e] cha va[dhi]siti chā diya[dhi]yaṃ he[vaṃ] ti ; “ both the lowly and the exalted must be told : ‘ If you act thus, this matter (will be) prosperous and of long duration, and will thus progress to one and a half ’ ” [Hultsch].

<sup>11</sup> Pakame (S.) ; palākame (Sa.) ; pakarā (R.).

<sup>12</sup> Here Rūpnath and Sah. interpose some new matter :

Rūp. Iya cha aṭhe pavatis[u] lekhāpeta vālata

Sah. Ima cha aṭham pavatesu [likhāpa]yāthā

Rūp. Hadha cha athi sālā-ṭh[abh]e silāṭha[m]bhasi lākhāpetavaya ta

Sah. Ya . . [vā] ath[i] hetā silā-tham[bh]ā tata pi [likhāpayatha tji].

[BRAHMAGIRI]

(Continued from previous Edict)

8 Se hevaṃ Devāṇāṃpiye

9 āha

mātā-pitisu susūs[i]taviye hemeva garu[su] prāṇesu drahyi-tavyam sacham

10 vataviyam se ime dhamma-guṇā pavatitaviyā

hemeva aṁtevāsina ii āchariye apachāyitaviye nātikesu cha [ka]m ya . . raham<sup>1</sup> pavatitaviye

12 esā porā[ŋ]ā pa[k]itī d[īgh]āvuse cha esa
hevaṃ esa kativiye

13 Chapadena likhite li[pi]karena <sup>2</sup>

B. THE BHABRU OR BAIRAT No. 2 ROCK EPIC

१ Pr[i]yadas[i] l[ā]jā Māgadhe saṁghaṁ abhivāde[tū]naṁ āhā ap[ā]bādhatāṁ cha phāsu-vihālatāṁ chā

2 vidīte v[e] bhaṁte āvatake h[a]mā Budhasi Dhammasi Saṁghasī ti gālave chaṁ prasāde cha e kechi bhaṁte

3 bhagavatā Budhe[na] bhāsīte sarve se subhāsīte vā
e chu kho bhamīte hamīyāye diseṇā<sup>3</sup> hevaṃ sadhamme

4 chil[a-ṭhi]tīke hosatī ti alahāmi hakam taṇi v[ā]tave<sup>4</sup>
imāni bhamt[e dha]mmapaliyāyāni Vinaya-samukase

After this, R. has the following sentence, which may be compared with a similar sentence occurring in Sarnath M.P.E :

Rūp. Etinā cha vayajananā yāvataka tupaka ahāle

Sar. Āvate cha tūphākam āhāle

Rūp. savara vivasetavā[ya] ti

Sar. savata vivāsayātha tuphe etena viyamjanena

<sup>13</sup> Rūp. Vy[ū]thenā sāvane kate 200 50 6 sata vivāsā ta.

Sah. Iyam [cha savane v]ivuthena duve sapamnā lāti-satā vivuthā ti 200 50 6.

<sup>1</sup> Yathāraham in Jat. Ram. version.

<sup>2</sup> This word is written in Kharosthī characters.

<sup>3</sup> The word appears from the plate of the inscription to be diseyo, as pointed out by Dr. B. M. Barua [Ind. Hist. Quarterly, II. 88].

<sup>4</sup> It should be read as vitave, as shown by Barua [Ib.].

LINE

- 5 Aliya-vasāṇi Anāgata-bhayāni Muni-gāthā Moneya-sūte Upatisa-pasine e chā Lāghulo—
6 vāde musā-vādaṁ adhigichya bhagavatā Budhena bhāsīte etāni bhaṁte dhamma-paliyāyāni ichhāmi
7 kiṁti bahuke bhikhu-[p]āye chā<sup>1</sup> bhikhuniye ch[ā] abhikhinaṁ sun[e]yu chā upadhāl[a]yeyū chā
8 hevaṁmevā upāsakā chā upāsikā chā etenī<sup>2</sup> bhaṁte imaṁ likhā[pa]yāmi abhipretaṁ me janaṁtū ti

C. THE KALINGA ROCK EDICTS

I

[DHAULI]

- 1 [Devāna]m[pi]y[asa vacha]nena Tosaliyaṁ · ma[hā]māta [naga]la[v]i[yo]hālak[ā]
2 [va]taviya<sup>3</sup>
[aṁ kichhi dakhā]mi hakaṁ taṁ ichhāmi k[i]m[t]i kaṁ[manapa]ṭi[pāday]ehaṁ
3 duvālate cha ālabhehaṁ esa cha me mokhya-mata duvā[la etasi aṭha]si aṁ tuph[esu]
4 anusathi
tuphe hi bahūsu pāna-sahasasuṁ ā[yata] p[a]na[yam] [ga]chh[e]ma su munisānaṁ save 5 munise pajā mama
ath[ā] pajāye ichhāmi h[a]ka[m] kimti sa[ve]na hi]tasukhena hidalo[kika]-
6 pālalokike[na] y[ūjev]ū [t]i [tathā . . . muni]sesu<sup>4</sup> pi [i] chhāmi [ha]ka[m]
no cha pāpunātha āv[a]-ga-

<sup>1</sup> The expression in the plate of the inscription as reproduced in Hultzsch's work reads like "bhikhupo ye chā bhikhuni ye chā," "many who are monks and who are nuns." This is pointed out by Barua [Ib.].

<sup>2</sup> A mistake for etenā.

<sup>3</sup> J. reads: "Devānaṁpiye hevaṁ āhā: Samāpāyaṁ mahāmātā nagalaviyohālaka hevaṁ vataviyā."

<sup>4</sup> Restore sava-munisesu.

LINE

- 7 [m]u[k]e [iyam̐ aṭhe]
[k]e[chha] v[a] eka-puli [se] . . . . nāti <sup>1</sup> e[ta]m̐ se pi desam̐ no savam̐
de[kha]t[a hi t]u[phe] etam̐
- 8 suvi[hi]tā pi
[n]itiyam̐ <sup>2</sup> eka-pulise [pi athi] y[e] bam̐dhanam̐ vā [p]alikilesam̐ vā pāpunāti
tata hoti
- 9 akasmā tena badhana[m̐]tik[a] am̐ne cha . . . . hu jane <sup>3</sup> da[v]iye dukhīyati <sup>4</sup>
tata ichhitaviye
- 10 tuphehi kim̐ti m[a]jham̐ paṭipādayemā ti imeh[i] chu [jāteh]i no sam̐paṭipajati isāya āsulopena
- 11 ni[ṭhū]liyena tūlanā[ya] anāvūtiya ālasiyena k[i]lamathena se ichhitaviye kitim̐ <sup>5</sup> ete
- 12 [jātā no] huvevu ma[m̐]ā ti etasa cha sava[sa] mūle anāsulope a[tū]l[a]nā cha niti[ya]m̐ e kilam̐te siyā
- 13 [na] te uga[chha] <sup>6</sup> sam̐chalitaviy[e] tu va[t]ita[v]iy[e] etaviye vā <sup>7</sup> hevam̐meva e da[kheya] t[u]phāk[a] tena vataviye
- 14 ānam̐ne dekhata <sup>8</sup> hevam̐ cha hev[a]m̐ cha [D]evānam̐piyasa
anusathi
se <sup>9</sup> mah[ā-pha]le [e] t[a]sa [sam̐pa]ṭipāda
- 15 mahā-apāye asam̐paṭipati
[vi]paṭ[i]pādayam̐ne hi etam̐ nathi svagasa [ā]l[a]dhi no lāj[ā]la[dh]i
- 16 duā[ha]le hi i[ma]sa kam̐m[asa] m[e] kute man[o]-atileke sa[m̐]paṭipajam̐[i]n[e] chu [etam̐] svaga[m̐]
- 17 ālādha[yi]sa[tha mama cha ā]naniyam̐ ehatha
iyam̐ cha l[i]p[i] t[i]sana[kha]tena <sup>10</sup> so[ta]viy[ā]

<sup>1</sup> Read pāpunāti as at Jaugada.

<sup>2</sup> J. reads bahuka, i. e., " frequently."

<sup>3</sup> J. reads anye cha [va]ge bahuke.

<sup>4</sup> Vedayati (J.).

<sup>5</sup> A mistake for kim̐ti.

<sup>6</sup> Uthāy[ā] (J.) ; ugachha is a mistake for ugachhe.

<sup>7</sup> Etaviye pi nūt[i]yam̐ (J.).

<sup>8</sup> Nijhap[e]ta[vi]ye (J.)

<sup>9</sup> Etam̐ in J.

<sup>10</sup> Anutisam̐ in J.

LINE

- 18 am̐ta[l]ā [p]i cha [t]i[s]e[na kha]nasi kha[nas]i ekena pi
 sotaviya
 hevaṁ cha kalam̐taṁ tuphe
 19 chaghattha saṁpa[ti]pād[a]y[i]tave
 [e]t[ā]ye aṭhāye iya[m̐] [l]i[p]i likhit[a] [h]ida ena.
 20 nagala-vi[y]o[hā]lakā <sup>1</sup> sas[v]ataṁ samayaṁ yūjevū t[i] . . . . .
 [na]sa <sup>2</sup> akasmā [pa]libodhe va
 21 [a]k[a]smā paliki[l]e[s]e va no siyā ti etāye cha aṭhāye haka[m̐] . . . . mate <sup>3</sup> p[a]m̐chasu paṁchasu [va]se-
 22 su <sup>4</sup> [n]i[khā]may[i]sāmi e <sup>5</sup> akhakhase a[chaṁ]d[e] s[a]khinālambhe hosati etaṁ aṭhaṁ jānitu . . . . . [ta]thā
 23 kala[m̐]ti atha mama anusathī ti
 Ujenite pi chu kumāle etāye v[a] aṭhāye [ni]khāma[yisa] 24 hedisameva vagaṁ no cha atikāmayisati tim̐ni vasāni hemeva T[a]kha[s]ilāte pi
 [a]dā a . . . . .
 25 te mahāmātā <sup>6</sup> nikhamisaṁti anusayānaṁ tadā ahāpayitu atane kaṁmaṁ etaṁ pi jānisaṁti
 26 taṁ pi ta[thā] kalam̐ti a[tha] lājine anusathī ti

II

[JAUGADA]

- 1 Devānaṁpiye hevaṁ ā[ha]
 Samāpāyaṁ mahamatā l[ā]ja-vachanik[a] vataviyā <sup>7</sup> aṁ kichhi dakh[ā]mi hakaṁ taṁ i[chh]āmi hakaṁ k[im]ti
 kaṁ kamana
 2 paṭipātayehaṁ duvā[la]te cha ālabhehaṁ esa cha me mokhiya-mat[a] duvāl[a] etasa a[tha]sa a[m̐] t[uph]esu anusa[thi]

<sup>1</sup> J. has " mahāmātā nagalaviyohālaka."

<sup>2</sup> Restore ena janasa ; J. has " ena [muni]s[ānaṁ]."

<sup>3</sup> Read mahāmātari.

<sup>4</sup> J. here adds the word " anu[sa]yānaṁ."

<sup>5</sup> J. here has the words " mahāmāta[m̐] acharṇḍa[m̐] apha[usa]m̐ ta."

<sup>6</sup> J. has here the word " . . . vachanik[a] " = probably lājavachanika as used in the second K.R.E., Jaugada.

<sup>7</sup> D. reads : " Devānaṁpiyasa vachanena Tosaliyaṁ kumāle mahāmātā cha vataviya."

LINE

- 3 sava-muni-sā me pajā
 atha pajāy[e] ichhāmi kimti me saveṇā hita-su[kh]ena yu[je]yū [a]tha pajāye ichhāmi kim[ti] m[e] savena hita-su-4 kh[e]na yujeyū <sup>1</sup> ti hidalogika-pālaloki[k]e[ṇa] hevaṁmeva me ichha savamunisesu
 siyā aṁtānaṁ [a]vijitā
 5 -naṁ kim-chhāṁde su lājā aphenū ti etākā <sup>2</sup> [vā] me ichha [a]mtesu pāpuneyu lājā hevaṁ ichh[a]ti anu[v]i[g]ina hve[yū]
 6 mamiyāye [a]svaseyu cha me sukhaṁ[m]ev[a] cha lahey[ū] mamate [n]o kha[m] <sup>3</sup> hevaṁ cha pāpuneyu kha[m]i[sa]ti ne lājā <sup>4</sup>
 7 e s[a]kiye khamitave mamaṁ nimitaṁ cha dhaṁma[m] chaley[ū]ti hidalog[am] cha palalogam cha ālādhayey[ū] etāye
 8 cha aṭhāye hakaṁ tupheni anusāsāmi ana[ne eta]kena
 [ha]kaṁ tupheni a[nu]sāsitu chhaṁda[m] cha] vedi-9 [t]u ā mama dhiti paṭimnā cha achala sa hevaṁ [ka]tū k[am]me [cha]litaviye asvāsa[n]iyā ch [a] te en[a] te pāpune-10 yu a[th]ā pita [h]evaṁ [n]e lājā ti atha [a]tānaṁ anukampat[i] he]vaṁ a[ph]eni anuka[m]pa]ti athā pajā he-11 vaṁ [may]e lā[j]ine
 tupheni hakaṁ anusāsita <sup>5</sup> [chh]āṁdaṁ [cha v]e[di]ta <sup>6</sup> [ā] [ma]ma dhiti paṭi[m]nā chā achala <sup>7</sup> [saka]la-
 12 desā-āy[ut]ike <sup>8</sup> hosāmi et[a]si [a]thas[i]
 [a]laṁ <sup>9</sup> [h]i tuphe asvāsa[nā]ye hi[ta]-sukhāye [cha te]sa[m] hida-
 13 logi[ka]-p[ā]lal[o]ki[k]ā[y]e hevaṁ cha kalamtaṁ svaga[m] cha ālādhayisa[tha] mama cha ā[va]n]eyam es[a]tha <sup>10</sup> e-

<sup>1</sup> The last eight words are repeated by a mistake, one of the few mistakes of the scribe (cf. lipikarāparādhena, R.E. XIV).

<sup>2</sup> Probably a mistake for etākā.

<sup>3</sup> For dukhaṁ, as in D.

<sup>4</sup> In place of this word, D. has "Devānaṁpiye aphākā ti."

<sup>5</sup> A mistake for anusāsitu.

<sup>6</sup> A mistake for veditu.

<sup>7</sup> The last six words do not appear in the D. text.

<sup>8</sup> D. reads "desāvutike." The word is a mistake for desāyutike.

<sup>9</sup> Paṭibalā in D.

<sup>10</sup> Ehatha in D.

LINE

- 14 tāye cha a[th]āye i[ya]m lipī li[kh]i[ta hi]da e[na ma]h[ā]- mātā sāsavatam samam <sup>1</sup> yujeyū asvāsanāye cha 15 dhamma-chala[nā]ye [cha] am̐tā[na]m iyam cha lipī a[nu]ch[ā]tum[m]āsam <sup>2</sup> s[ota]viyā tisenā am̐tā[lā] <sup>3</sup> pi cha sotaviyā 16 khane sam̐tam eke[na] pi [sota]v[i]yā heva[m] cha [ka]lam[ta]m chaghatha sampatipātayit[ave]

D. THE FOURTEEN ROCK EDICTS

I

[SHABAZGARHI]

- 1 [aya] dhrama-dipi <sup>4</sup> Devanapriasa raño likhapitu hida no kich[i] jive ara[bh]itu p]rayuhotave no pi ch[a] sama[ja] kaṭava ba[hu]ka [hi] doṣa sa[maya]spī
Devanapriy[e] Priadraṣi ray[a da]khati
2 [a]sti pi chu ekatia samaye sasu-mate <sup>5</sup> Devanapriasa Priadraṣisa raño pura <sup>6</sup> mahana[sas]i [Devana]pr[i]asa Priadraṣisa raño anudivaso bahunī pra[ṇa]-śata-sahasani [arabhi]yis[u] supaṭhaye
s[o i]dani <sup>7</sup> yada aya
3 dhrama-dipi likhita tada trayo <sup>8</sup> vo praṇa ham̐nam̐t[i] <sup>9</sup> majura <sup>10</sup> duv[i] 2 mrugo 1 so pi mrugo no dhruva[m] eta pi praṇa trayo pacha no arabhiśam̐ti

<sup>1</sup> A mistake for samayam.

<sup>2</sup> After this word D. adds the words " tisenā nakhatena."

<sup>3</sup> D. has a variant here : " kamam chu khaṇasi khaṇasi am̐talā pi tisenā."

<sup>4</sup> This word is followed in J. by the words " Khepim̐galasi pavatasi " and in D. by " . . . [si pava]tasi."

<sup>5</sup> Sādhū-matā (G.).

<sup>6</sup> Puluvaṁ (J.).

<sup>7</sup> Aja (G., D. and J.).

<sup>8</sup> Tī (G.), timni (K.).

<sup>9</sup> Ārabhare (G.).

<sup>10</sup> Morā (G.), majūlā (J.).

II

[GIRNAR]

LINE

- 1 sarvata vijitamhi <sup>1</sup> Devānampriyasa Piyadasino rāṇo
 2 evamapi pracharṁtesu <sup>2</sup> yathā Chodā Pādā <sup>3</sup> Satiyaputo <sup>4</sup>
 Ketalaputo <sup>5</sup> ā Tamba-3 parṁñi Am̐tiyako Yona-rājā ye vā pi tasa Am̐tiy[a]kas[a] sāmip[am̐] <sup>6</sup>
 4 rājāno sarvatra Devānampriyasa Priyadasino rāṇo dve chikīchha katā
 5 manusa-chikīchhā cha pasu-chikīchhā cha osudhāni cha yāni m[a]nusopagān[i] cha 6 paso[pā]gāni cha yata yata nāsti sarvatrā hārāpitāni cha rop[ā]pitāni <sup>7</sup> cha <sup>8</sup> 7 mūlāni cha phalāni cha yata yatra nāsti sarvata hārāpitāni cha rop[ā]pitāni cha 8 parṁthesū <sup>9</sup> kūpā <sup>10</sup> cha khānāpitā vrachhā <sup>11</sup> cha ropāpit[ā] paribhogāya <sup>12</sup> pasumanusānam

III

[GIRNAR]

- 1 Devānampiyo Piyadasi r[ā]jā evam āha
 dbādasa-vāsā-bhisitena mayā idam ān[a]pitam
 2 sarvata vijite mama yutā cha rājūke cha prādesike cha paṁchasu paṁchasu vāsesu anusam-

<sup>1</sup> Vijitasi (K.), vijite (S.).

<sup>2</sup> Am̐tā (K.), ata (M.).

<sup>3</sup> Parṁḍiyā in other texts.

<sup>4</sup> Sātiyaputo (K.), Satiyaputro (S.).

<sup>5</sup> A mistake for Keralaputra (M.); Kelalaputo (K.), Keraḍaputro (S.).

<sup>6</sup> Sāmam̐tā in other texts.

<sup>7</sup> Vuta in S.

<sup>8</sup> The words from this up to the word parṁthesū in l. 8 are omitted in the S. text.

<sup>9</sup> Magesu in other texts.

<sup>10</sup> Udupānāni in other texts.

<sup>11</sup> Lukhāni (K., D. and J.), ruchhani (M.). The three words from this are omitted in the S. text.

<sup>12</sup> Paṭibhogāye (K., D. and J.).

LINE

- 3 y[ā]na[m̐ n]iyātu<sup>1</sup> etāyeva athāya imāya dhammānusasṭiya yatha añā-
4 ya pi kamṁāy[a]
[s]ādhu mātari cha pitari cha susrūsā mitra-samstuta-ñātinam bāmhaṇa-
5 samañānam sādhu[d]ānam prāñānam<sup>2</sup> sādhu anārambho apa-vyayatā apa-bhādatā<sup>3</sup> sādhu
6 parisā pi yute añāpayisati gaṇanāyam hetuto cha vyamjanato cha

IV

[GIRNAR]

- 1 atikātam am[t]a[ra]m bahūni vāsa-satāni vadhito eva prāñā-rambho vihiṁsā cha bhūtānam ñātisu
2 a[s]ampratipatī brā[m]haṇa-sramañānam<sup>4</sup> asaṁpratipatī ta aja Devānampriyasa Priyadasino rāṇo 3 dhamma-charaṇena [bhe]rī-ghoso aho dhamma-ghoso vimānadarsaṇā cha hasti-da[sa]ṇā cha 4 agi-kh[a]m[dhā]ni<sup>5</sup> cha [a]ñāni cha divyāni rūpāni dasayitpā janam
yārise bahūhi v[āsa]-satehi
5 na bhūta-puve tārise aja vadhite Devānampriyasa Priyadasino rāṇo dhammānusasṭiyā anāram-6 [bh]o prāñānam avihisā bhūtānam ñātinam sampaṭipatī brahmaṇa-samañānam<sup>6</sup> sampaṭipatī mātari pitari 7 [s]usrusā thaira<sup>7</sup>-susrusā esa añe cha bahavidhe [dha]mma-charaṇe va[dhi]te vaḍhayisati cheva Devānampriyo
8 [Pri]ya[da]si rājā dhamma-[cha]raṇam idam putrā cha [p]otrā cha prapotrā<sup>8</sup> cha Devānampriyasa
Priyadasino rāṇo

<sup>1</sup> Nikramatu (S. and M.), nikhamamtu (K.), nikhamāvū (D. and J.).

<sup>2</sup> Jivesu in D. and J.

<sup>3</sup> Apabhamḍalā in other texts.

<sup>4</sup> The two words of the compound are reversed in other versions.

<sup>5</sup> Joti-kamdhani in S.

<sup>6</sup> Samana-bābhanesu in D.

<sup>7</sup> Vudha-susūsā (D.), vuḍhanam suśruṣa (S.).

<sup>8</sup> Natāle chā panātikyā chā (K.).

LINE

- 9 [pra]vadhayisaṁti idaṁ [dha]ṁma-charaṇaṁ āva savaṭakapā<sup>1</sup> dhaṁmamhi sīlamhi tiṣṭamto [dha]ṁmaṁ anusāsisamti
- 10 [e]sa hi seṣṭe<sup>2</sup> kaṁme ya dhaṁmānusāsanaṁ
dhaṁma-charaṇe pi na [bha]vati asīlasa [ta]imamhi athamhi
- 11 [va]dhi cha ahīni cha sādhu
e[t]āya athāya ida[m] lekhāpitaṁ<sup>3</sup> imasa atha[sa] v[a]dhi yujamtu hīni ch[a]
- 12 [no] lochetavyā<sup>4</sup>
dbādasa-vāsābhisitena Devān[a]ṁpriyena Priyadasinā rāṇ[a] idaṁ lekhāpitaṁ<sup>5</sup>

V

[MANSEHRA]

- 1 De[vanam]priyena Priyadraśi raja eva[m] aha
kalaṇa[m] dukara[m]
ye adikare kayaṇasa se dukaraṁ karoti taṁ maya bahu
[ka]ayaṇe [ka]ṭe
[ta]m ma[a] putra [cha]
- 2 natar[e] cha para cha t[e]na ye apatiye<sup>6</sup> me [a]va-[ka]paṁ tatha anuvaṭṭisati se sukata ka[sa]ti ye [chu] atra deśa pi hapeṣati<sup>7</sup> se dukata kaṣati<sup>8</sup>
- 3 pape hi nama supadarave<sup>9</sup>
s[e] atikrata[m] a[m]tara[m] na bhuta-pruva dhrama[ma]hamatra nama
se 'redāsa-va[sa]bhisitena maya dhrama-mahamatra kaṭa
te savra-pa[sa]deśa

<sup>1</sup> Ā-kapaṁ (D.), āva-kapaṁ (K.).<sup>2</sup> Sretham in S.<sup>3</sup> Nipistaṁ in S.<sup>4</sup> Alochayisu (K., M., D. and J.).<sup>5</sup> Nipesitaṁ in S.<sup>6</sup> S. has " me apacha vṛakṣamti."<sup>7</sup> Hāpayisati in K. and D.<sup>8</sup> Kachhamti in K. and D.<sup>9</sup> G. here reads " sukaram hi pāpaṁ."

LINE

- 4 vapuṭa dhramadhitha[na]ye cha dhrama-vadhriya hidasukhaye cha dh[r]ama-yutasa Yona-Kaṁboja-Gadharana <sup>1</sup> Raṭhika-Pitinikana <sup>2</sup> ye va pi añe aparata <sup>3</sup>
bhaṭamaye-
- 5 su braṁaṇibhyeṣu anatheṣu vudhreṣu <sup>4</sup> hida-su[khaye] dhrama-yuta-apalibodhaye <sup>5</sup> viya[p]uṭa te badhana-badha[sa] paṭivi[dhanay]e apalibodhaye mokṣay[e] [cha iyaṁ]
- 6 anubadha p[r]aja <sup>6</sup> t[i] va kaṭrabhikara ti va mahalake <sup>7</sup> ti va viyapraṭa te hida <sup>8</sup> bahireṣu cha nagaresu savreṣu <sup>9</sup> [o]rodhaneṣu <sup>10</sup> bhatana <sup>11</sup> cha spas[u]na <sup>12</sup> [cha]
- 7 ye va pi añe ṇatike savratra viyapaṭa
[e] iyaṁ dhrama-niṣito <sup>13</sup> to va dhramadhithane ti va dana-saṁyute ti va savratra vijitasi <sup>14</sup> maa dhrama-yutasi vaputa [te]
- 8 dhrama-mahamatra
etaye athraye ayi dhrama-dipi <sup>15</sup> likhita <sup>16</sup> chira-ṭhitika hotu tatha cha me
praja anuvaṭatu

<sup>1</sup> Gaṁdhārānam (G.).

<sup>2</sup> Riṣṭika-Petenikānam (G.); Raṭhikanam Pitinikanam (S.);
Laṭhika-Pitenikesu (D.).

<sup>3</sup> Aparamita (S.), Āpalamitā (D.).

<sup>4</sup> Mahālakesu (D.).

<sup>5</sup> Aparigodhāya (G.), apaligodha (S.).

<sup>6</sup> Pajāva (K.).

<sup>7</sup> Thairesu (G.).

<sup>8</sup> Pāṭalipute cha (G.).

<sup>9</sup> D. has " savesu savesu."

<sup>10</sup> Between this word and the next, D. adds " me e vā pi."

<sup>11</sup> Bhātinam (D.); bhatana is a mistake for bhatuna.

<sup>12</sup> Bhaginīnam (D.).

<sup>13</sup> Dhamma-nisrito (G.).

<sup>14</sup> D. has " sava-puṭhaviyaṁ."

<sup>15</sup> Lipi in other texts.

<sup>16</sup> Nipista in S.

VI

[GIRNAR]

LINE

- 1 [Devā] . . . . . <sup>1</sup> [s]i rājā evaṃ āha
atikrāt[a]m āntara[m]
2 na bhūta-pru[v] <sup>2</sup> . [s] . [v] . . . [l] . <sup>3</sup> atha-karṇme va paṭi-vedanā vā
ta mayā evaṃ kataṃ
3 s[a]ve kāle bhumj[a]mānasa <sup>4</sup> me <sup>5</sup> orodhanamhi gabhāgā-ramhi vachamhi va
4 vinītamhi cha uyānesu cha savatra paṭivedakā śītā athe me
[ja]nasa
5 paṭivedetha <sup>6</sup> iti sarvatra cha janasa athe karomi
ya cha kiṃchi mukhato
6 āñapayāmi svayaṃ <sup>7</sup> dāpakam vā srāvāpakam <sup>8</sup> vā ya vā puna mahāmātresu
7 āchāyi[ke] <sup>9</sup> aropitaṃ bhavati <sup>10</sup> tāya athāya vivādo nijhatī
v[a s]amto parisāyam
8 ānamtaram <sup>11</sup> paṭ[i]vedeta[v]yam me <sup>12</sup> sa[r]vatra sarve kāle evaṃ mayā āñapitaṃ <sup>13</sup>
nāsti hi me to[s]o
9 uṣṭānamhi atha-samīraṇāya va
katavya-mate hi me sa[rva]-loka-hitam
10 tasa cha puna esa mūle uṣṭānam cha athasamīraṇā cha nāsti hi karṇmataram

<sup>1</sup> Restore " Devānampriyo Piyadasi."

<sup>2</sup> Read " purva."

<sup>3</sup> Restore save kāle.

<sup>4</sup> Adamānasā (K.), aśamanasa (S.), aśatasa (M.).

<sup>5</sup> D. and J. read " me ante olodhanasi."

<sup>6</sup> " Prativedayaṃtu me ti " in J.

<sup>7</sup> Aham in S. and M.

<sup>8</sup> Sāvakaṃ in K., D. and J.

<sup>9</sup> Atiyāyike in K., D., and J.

<sup>10</sup> Hoti in K., M., D. and J.

<sup>11</sup> Anamītariyena in S.

<sup>12</sup> The words from sarvatra in l. 5 up to this word have been repeated by mistake in S.

<sup>13</sup> D. and J. read " hevaṃ me anusathe."

LINE

II sarva-loka-hitatpā<sup>1</sup>

ya cha kimchi parākramāmi ahaṃ kimti bhūtānaṃ ānaṃṇaṃ gachheyaṃ<sup>2</sup>

12 idha cha nāni<sup>3</sup> sukhāpayāmi paratrā cha svagaṃ<sup>4</sup> ārādha-yaṃtu ta<sup>5</sup>

etāya athāya

13 ayaṃ dha[m]ma-lipī lekhapitā<sup>6</sup> kimti chiraṃ tiṣṣeya iti<sup>7</sup> tathā cha me putrā potā cha prapotrā cha

14 anuvataṃ sava-loka-hitāya

dukaraṃ [t]u idaṃ añatra agena parākramena

VII

[SHAHBAZGARHI]

1 Devanaṃpriyo Priyaśi<sup>8</sup> raja savatra ichhati savra-

2 [p]raṣaṃda vaseyu

save hi te sayame bhava-śudhi cha ichhamti

3 jano chu uchavucha-chhaṃdo uchavucha-rago te savraṃ va eka-deśaṃ va

4 pi kaṣaṃti

vipule pi chu dane yasa nasti sayama bhava-

5 śudhi kiṭṭaṇata dridha-bhatita niche paḍham<sup>9</sup>

VIII

[SHAHBAZGARHI]

1 Atikrataṃ ataraṃ Devanaṃpriya vihara-yatra nama nikramaṣu<sup>10</sup>

atra mrugaya añani cha ediṣani abhiraṃmani abhuvasu<sup>11</sup>

so Devanaṃpriyo Priyadraśi raja daśavaṣaḇḷisito sataraṃ

<sup>1</sup> Other texts have " sava-loka-hitena."

<sup>2</sup> Yehaṃ in other texts and vachheyaṃ in S.

<sup>3</sup> Kāni in K., D. and J. ; ṣa in S. and ṣe in M.

<sup>4</sup> Spagaram in S.

<sup>5</sup> Se in K. and M. ; = " now."

<sup>6</sup> " Dhrama nipista " in S.

<sup>7</sup> " Chirathitika bhotu " (S.), " chila-ṭhitikyā hotu " (K.).

<sup>8</sup> Read Priyadraśi.

<sup>9</sup> Bāḍham in other texts.

<sup>10</sup> Nayāsu G(.).

<sup>11</sup> Ahuṃsu (G.), husu (K.), huvaṃti nam (D., J.).

LINE

nikrami <sup>1</sup> Sabodhi <sup>2</sup>
 tenada dhraṃma-yatra
 atra iyaṃ hoti śramaṇa-bramaṇanam <sup>3</sup> draśane danam vudhana[m] <sup>4</sup> daśana hiraṇa-p[r]aṭivīdhane cha [jana]- padasa janasa draśana dhramanuśasti dhrama-pa[ri]p[ru]- chha cha tatopayam ese bhuy[e ra]ti <sup>5</sup> bhoti Devanam̐priyasa Priyadrasisa raṇo bhago am̐ni

IX

[KALSI]

- 1 Devānam̐piye Piy[a]da[s]i lā[jā] āhā jan[e] uch[āv]ucham̐ maṃgalaṃ ka[l]eṭṭhābādhasi av[āha]si vivāhasi pajopadāne <sup>6</sup> pavāsasi e[tā]ye am̐nāye chā edisāye jane bahu magala[m] k[a]leti heta [ch]u abaka-jani[yo] <sup>7</sup> bahu chā bahuvidham̐ chā khudā <sup>8</sup> [ch]ā nilathiyā chā magalaṃ ka[l]a[m̐ti 2 se kaṭavi <sup>9</sup> cheva kho maṃgale apa-phale [ch]u kho [e]s[e] [i]yam̐ chu kho mah[ā]-ph[a]le ye dham̐ma-magale he[tā] <sup>10</sup> iyam̐ dāsa-bhatakasī s[a]myāpaṭip[a]ti gulunā apachiti [p]ā[n]ān[am̐] sam̐yame s[a]man[a]-bam̐bhanā-nam̐ <sup>11</sup> dāne ese am̐ne chā hedise | <sup>12</sup> dham̐ma-magale nāmā se vata[v]iye pitinā pi putena pi bh[ā]tinā pi suvāmiken[a] <sup>13</sup> pi mita-sam̐thuten[ā] ava paṭivesiyenā [p]i

<sup>1</sup> Ayāya (G.).

<sup>2</sup> Sambodhim (G.).

<sup>3</sup> Bāmhaṇa-samaṇānam (G.).

<sup>4</sup> Thairānām (G.).

<sup>5</sup> Abhilāme (D. and J.).

<sup>6</sup> According to Kalsi grammar, the locative of upadāna should end in -asi; hence it should be pajopadāye as in D. and J. G. has "putra-lābhesu."

<sup>7</sup> Mahidāyo (G.), striyaka (S.), ithi (D.).

<sup>8</sup> Chhudam (G.), putika (S.).

<sup>9</sup> A mistake for kaṭaviye.

<sup>10</sup> Tateta (G.), atra (M.), tutesa (D.).

<sup>11</sup> G. has the usual "bamhaṇa-samaṇānam."

<sup>12</sup> This mark of punctuation is read as the word taṃ by Senart and Bühler.

<sup>13</sup> Spamikena (S. and M.).

LINE

- 3 iyaṃ sādhu iyaṃ kaṭaviye [ma]g[a]le āva [ta]sā athasā ni[v]utiyā <sup>1</sup> imaṃ kachhāmi ti e hi i[ta]le magale sa[m]sayikye se siyā va taṃ aṭhaṃ nivaṭey[ā] siyā punā no hi[da]lokike chev[a] se iyaṃ punā dhamma-magale akāliky[e] haṃche pi taṃ aṭhaṃ no niṭeti <sup>2</sup> hida aṭhaṃ <sup>3</sup> palata anantaṃ punā pavasati <sup>4</sup> haṃche puna taṃ aṭhaṃ nivateti hidā tato ubhaye[sa]m 4 ladhe hoti hida chā se aṭhe palata chā anantaṃ punā <sup>5</sup> pasavati tenā dhamma-magalen[ā]

IX

[GIRNAR VARIANT <sup>6</sup>]

- 6 asti cha pi vutaṃ
 7 sādhu dana <sup>7</sup> iti na tu etārisaṃ astā <sup>8</sup> dānaṃ va ana[ga]ho <sup>9</sup> va yārisaṃ dhamma-dānaṃ va dhamanugaho va ta tu kho mitrena va suhodayena [v]ā 8 nātikena <sup>10</sup> va sahāyana <sup>11</sup> va ovāditavyaṃ tamhi tamhi pakaraṇe [i]daṃ kachaṃ idaṃ sādha <sup>12</sup> iti iminā sak[a] 9 svagaṃ ārādhetu iti ki cha iminā katavyataraṃ yathā svagāradhi

<sup>1</sup> Nistānāya (G.), nīphatiyū (D.).

<sup>2</sup> A mistake for nivaṭeti (M.).

<sup>3</sup> A mistake for atha, as in S.

<sup>4</sup> A mistake for pumnaṃ pasavati.

<sup>5</sup> Read pumnam.

<sup>6</sup> The variant starts from the word nivutiyā of l. 3 in Kalsi text. The Girnar reading is also followed in the Dhauli and Jaugaḍa versions.

<sup>7</sup> A mistake for dānaṃ.

<sup>8</sup> A mistake for asti.

<sup>9</sup> A mistake for anugaho.

<sup>10</sup> A mistake for nātikena.

<sup>11</sup> A mistake for sahāyena.

<sup>12</sup> A mistake for sādhu.

X

[KALSI]

LINE

- 1 Devā[nam]piye Piy[a]daśā<sup>1</sup> lajā y[a]śo vā kiti vā no [ma]hathāhvā<sup>2</sup> manati an[a]tā [ya]m pi yaso vā ki[t]i vā ichh[at]i tadatvāye ayatiye<sup>3</sup> chā jane dhamma-susūṣā sususātu me ti dhamma-vataṃ vā anuvi[dh]iya[m]tu ti dhata[k]āye<sup>4</sup> Devāna[m]piye Piyadasi
- 2 lajā yaśo vā kiti vā ichha<sup>5</sup> am ch[ā] kichhi lakamati<sup>6</sup> Devanampiye Piyadasi lajā ta [ṣa]va pālaṃtikiyāye<sup>7</sup> vā kiti sakale apa-p[a]lāṣave<sup>8</sup> ṣiyāti ti [e]ṣe chu palisave e apune dukale chu kho eṣe khudakena vā vagenā<sup>9</sup> uṣuṭena vā ana[ta] agen[ā pa]lakamenā ṣava[m] palitiditu [h]e[ta chu] kho
- 3 [u]ṣaṭe[na] vā dukale

XI

[SHAHBAZGARHI]

- 1 Devana[m]priyo Priyadraśi raya evaṃ hahati nasti ed[i]ṣaṃ danaṃ yadiṣaṃ dhrama-dana dhrama-saṃstav[e] dh[r]ama-saṃvihago dh[r]ama-saṃba[m]dha tatra etaṃ<sup>10</sup> dasa-bhāṭakanam saṃmma-paṭipati mata-pituṣu suṣruṣa mi[t]ṛa-saṃstuta-ñāṭikanaṃ śramaṇa-bramaṇa
- 2 dana praṇana anara[m]bho etaṃ vatavo pituna pi putrena pi bhratuna pi [spa]mikenā pi mitra-saṃstutana<sup>11</sup> ava prativeṣiyena [i]ma[m] sadhu ima ṇ kaṭavo

<sup>1</sup> A mistake for Piyadasi.<sup>2</sup> Mahāthāhvā in G.<sup>3</sup> Tadātpano dighāya in G.<sup>4</sup> A mistake for etahāye.<sup>5</sup> A mistake for ichhati.<sup>6</sup> A mistake for palakamati.<sup>7</sup> Pāratrikāya in G.<sup>8</sup> A mistake for -palisave.<sup>9</sup> Janena in G.<sup>10</sup> G. has tata idaṃ bhavati.<sup>11</sup> A mistake for -saṃstutena.

LINE

so tatha karaṭa[m] ialoka cha a[ra]dheti paratra cha anataṃ puṇa prasavati <sup>1</sup>

3 [te]na dhrama-danena

XII

[GIRNAR]

1 Devānaṃpiye Piyad[a]si rājā sava-pāsaṃdāni cha [pa]va-jitāni cha gharastāni cha pūjayati d[ā]nena cha vivādhāya <sup>2</sup> [cha] pūjāya pūjayati ne

2 na tu tathā dānaṃ va pū[jā] va D[e]vānaṃpiyo maññate yathā kiti sāra-vadhī asa sa[va-pā]saṃdānaṃ
sār[a]-vadhī tu bahuvīdhā

3 tasa tu idaṃ mūlaṃ ya vachi-gutī kiṃti ātpa-pāsaṃda-pūjā va para-pāsaṃda-garahā va no bhava aprakaraṇaṃhi lahukā va asa

4 tamhi tamhi prakaraṇe pūjetayā tu eva para-pāsaṃdā tena tana <sup>3</sup> prakarena <sup>4</sup> evaṃ karuṃ ātpa-pāsaṃdaṃ cha <sup>5</sup> vadhayati para-pāsaṃ-daṃ cha upakaroti

5 tad-amñathā karoto ātpa-pāsaṃdaṃ cha chhaṇati <sup>6</sup> para-pāsaṃdaṃ cha pi apakaroti yo hi kochi ātpa-pāsaṃdaṃ pūjayati para-pāsaṃdaṃ v[a] garahati

6 savaṃ ātpa-pāsaṃda-bhatiyā kiṃti ātpa-pāsaṃdaṃ dīpa-yema iti so cha puna tatha karāto <sup>7</sup> ātpa-pāsaṃda[m] bādhataṃ upahanāti
ta samavāyo <sup>8</sup> eva sādhu

7 kiṃti [a]ñamaññaṃ dhammaṃ sruṇāru cha susunsera cha evaṃ hi D[e]vānaṃpiyasa ichhā kiṃti sava-pāsaṃdā bahu-srutā cha asu kal[ā]ṇāgamā cha [a]su

8 ye cha tatra tata prasānā tehi vatavyaṃ
Devānaṃpiyo no tathā dānaṃ va pūjāṃ va maññate

<sup>1</sup> Sans. prasavyate ; G. has bhavati.

<sup>2</sup> A mistake for vividhāya.

<sup>3</sup> A mistake for tena.

<sup>4</sup> Akarena in S. and M.

<sup>5</sup> Baḍham in K. and M.

<sup>6</sup> Kṣaṇati in S.

<sup>7</sup> A mistake for karoto. The five words from this are repeated by mistake in S.

<sup>8</sup> Sayamo in S.

LINE

yathā kimti sāra-vaḍhī asa sarva-pāsādānaṃ bahakā <sup>1</sup> cha etāya

- 9 athā <sup>2</sup> vyāpatā dhamma-mahāmātā cha ithījhakha <sup>3</sup>-mahāmātā cha vachabhūmikā <sup>4</sup> cha añe cha nikāyā ayaṃ cha etasa phala ya ātpa-pāsanda-vaḍhī cha hoti dhammasa cha dīp[a]nā

XIII

[SHAHBAZGARHI]

- 1 [aṭha]-vaṣa-a[bhis]ita[sā Devana]pri[a]sa Pri[a]draśisa ra[ñō]
Ka[liga] vi[j]ita <sup>5</sup> diadha-mat[r]e praṇa-śata-[saha]sre y[c] tato apavudhe śata-sahasra-matre <sup>6</sup> tatra hate <sup>7</sup> bahu-tavata[ke va] m[ute]
2 tato [pa]cha a[dhu]na ladh[e]ṣu [Kaligeṣu tivre dhrama-śilana] <sup>8</sup> dhra[ma-ka]mata dhramanuśasti cha Devana-priyasa
so [a]sti anusochana Devanap[ria]sa vijinīti Kaliga[ni]
3 avijitāṃ [hī vijinamano yo tat[r]a vadha va maraṇaṃ va apavaho va janasa taṃ badhaṃ v[e]dani[ya]-ma[taṃ] guru-mata[m] cha Devanam[priyasa idaṃ pi chu [tato] guru-matataraṃ [Devanam]priyasa ye tatra
4 vasati brahmaṇa va śrama[ṇa] <sup>9</sup> va a[m]ñe va praśanda gra[ha]tha <sup>10</sup> va yesu vihita eṣa agrabhūti-suśruṣa matapituṣu suśruṣa guruna suśruṣa mitra-saṃstuta-sahaya-5 ūtikeṣu dasa-bhaṭakanāṃ samma-pratipa[ti] dīdha-bhatita teṣa tatra bhoti [a]pag[r]atho <sup>11</sup> va vadho va abhiratana va nikramaṇaṃ <sup>12</sup>

<sup>1</sup> A mistake for bahukā.

<sup>2</sup> Etāyāthāye (K.).

<sup>3</sup> Ithidhiyakha- (K.); istridhiyakṣa- (S.); istrijakṣa- (M.).

<sup>4</sup> Vracha- (M.).

<sup>5</sup> Kaligyā vijitā in K.

<sup>6</sup> Sata-sahasra-mātram (G.).

<sup>7</sup> Tatrā hataṃ (G.).

<sup>8</sup> Dhammavāyo (G.).

<sup>9</sup> Brāhmaṇa precedes the śramaṇa here in every version.

<sup>10</sup> Gihithā (K.).

<sup>11</sup> Upaghāte in K.

<sup>12</sup> Vinikhamāṇa in G.

LINE

yeṣa va pi suvihitanam̐ [si]ho <sup>1</sup> aviprahino [e te]ṣa mitra-saṁstuta-sahaya-ñātika vasana

- 6 prapūṇati [ta]tra taṁ pi teṣa vo apagratho bhoti pratibhagam̐ cha [e]taṁ savra-manuṣanam̐ guru-mataṁ cha Devanam̐priya[sa]
nasti <sup>2</sup> cha ekatare pi praśadaspi na nama prasado so yamatro <sup>3</sup> [ja]no tada Kalige [ha]to cha muṭ[o] cha apa-v[udha] cha tato

- 7 śata-bhage va sahasra-bhagam̐ va [a]ja guru-mataṁ v[o]
Devanam̐priyasa yo pi cha apakareyati kṣamitaviya-mate va Devanam̐- p[r]iyasa yaṁ śako kṣamanaye ya pi cha aṭavi Devanam̐priyasa vijite bhoti ta pi anuneti anunijapeti <sup>4</sup> anutape pi cha prabhave

- 8 Devanam̐priyasa vuchati teṣa kiti avatrapeyu na cha [ha]- mñeyasu
ichhati hi D[e]vanam̐priyo savra-bhutana akṣati sa[m̐]ya-mam̐ sama[cha]riyam̐ rabhasiye <sup>5</sup> ayi cha mukha-mut[a] vijaye Devanam̐priya[sa] yo dhrama-vijayo
so cha puna ladho Devanam̐priyasa iha cha saveṣu cha am̐teṣu

- 9 [a] ṣaṣu pi yojana-śa[t]eṣu yatra Am̐tiyoko nama Y[o]na-raja
param̐ cha tena Atiyok[e]na <sup>6</sup> chature 4 rajani Turamaye nama Am̐tikini nama Maka <sup>7</sup> nama Alikasudaro nama nicha Choḍa-Pam̐da ava Ta[m̐]bapam̐[ñi]ya
[e]vameva [hi]da raja-viṣavaspi <sup>8</sup> Yona-Ka[m̐]boyeṣu Nabhaka-Nabhitina <sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> A mistake for sineho.

<sup>2</sup> Here Kalsi (as well as Mansehra) offers the following variant :
Nathi chā ṣe jan[a]pade yatā nathi ime nikāyā ānatā Y[o]neṣ[u].
bam̐hmane ch[ā] ṣamane chā nathi chā kuvāpi jan[a]padaṣi
[ya]tā n[a]thi m[a]nuṣān[a] ekatalaṣ[i] pi pāṣadaṣi

<sup>3</sup> Yāvatako (G.).

<sup>4</sup> A mistake for anunijhapeti ; M. has anunijhapayati.

<sup>5</sup> Mādava (G.).

<sup>6</sup> Am̐tiyogenā (K.).

<sup>7</sup> Magā (G.).

<sup>8</sup> Rāja-visayamhi (G.).

<sup>9</sup> Nābhaka-Nābhapaṁtiṣu (K. and M.).

LINE

- 10 Bhoja-Pitinikeṣu Am̐dhra-Palideṣu <sup>1</sup> savatra Devanaṁ-priyasa dhramaṇuṣasti anuvaṭam̐ti yatra pi Devanaṁpriyasa duta no vracham̐ti <sup>2</sup> te pi śrutu Devanaṁpriyasa dhrama-vuṭaṁ vidh[a]ṇaṁ dhramaṇuṣasti dhramaṁ [a]nuvidhiyīṣaṁ[ti] cha yo [sa] ladhe etakena bho[ti] savatra vijayo sava[tra] pu[na] 11 vijayo priti-raso so ladha bh[oti] priti dhrama-vijayaspi lahuka tu kho so priti
 paratri[ka]meva maha-phala meṇati Devana[m̐]priyo etaye cha aṭhaye ayi dhrama-dipi nipi[sta] kiti putra papotra me asu navaṁ vijayaṁ ma vijetav[i]a <sup>3</sup> mañiṣu spa[kaspi] <sup>4</sup> yo vijay[e kṣaṁ]ti <sup>5</sup> cha lahu-da[m̐]data cha rochetu taṁ cha yo vija <sup>6</sup> maña[tu] 12 yo dhrama-vijayo
 so hidalokiko paralokiko
 sava-chati-rati bhotu ya [dh]raṇima-rati sa hi hidalokika paralokika <sup>7</sup>

XIV

[GIRNAR]

- 1 ayaṁ dham̐ma-lipī <sup>8</sup> Devāṇaṁpriyena Priyadasinā <sup>9</sup> r[ā]ṇā l[e]khāpitā <sup>10</sup> asti eva

<sup>1</sup> Pārīṇdesu (G.), Pāladeṣu (K.).

<sup>2</sup> Yam̐ti (K. and M.).

<sup>3</sup> Vijetavyaṁ (G.), vijayataviya (K.).

<sup>4</sup> Sarasake (G.), ṣayakaṣi (K.).

<sup>5</sup> Chhāti (G.).

<sup>6</sup> A mistake for vijayaṁ.

<sup>7</sup> Below the Girnar text on the left side occur two mutilated lines. In the first line Hultzsch recovers the word t[te]ṣa, which he takes to be a part of the well-known Buddhist formula -- "hetuṁ teṣāṁ Tathāgato hyavadat . teṣāṁ cha," etc. In the second line he recovers the letters [p]i[p]ā, and supposes it to have been followed by the word lipikareṇa.

On the right side of the same text occur the following words: "[Sa]rva-sveto hasti sarva-loka-sukhāharo nāma," "the altogether white elephant, the bringer of bliss for the whole world."

<sup>8</sup> Dhrama-dipi (S. and M.).

<sup>9</sup> Priṣi[na] in S., a mistake for Priyadrasina.

<sup>10</sup> Nīpesapita in S.

LINE

- 2 saṁkhit[e]na asti majhamena asti vistatana <sup>1</sup>
 na cha <sup>2</sup> sarvaṁ [ṣa]rvata ghaṭitaṁ <sup>3</sup> 3 mahālake hi vijitaṁ bahu cha likhitaṁ likhāpayisaṁ cheva <sup>4</sup> asti cha eta kaṁ <sup>5</sup> 4 puna puna vutaṁ <sup>6</sup> tasa tasa athasa mādthuratāya kimti <sup>7</sup>
 jano tathā paṭipajetha
 5 tatra ekadā <sup>8</sup> asaṁāt[a]ṁ likhitaṁ asa desaṁ <sup>9</sup> va sachh-āya <sup>10</sup> [kā]raṇaṁ va
 6 [a]lochetaṭpā lipikarāparadhena va <sup>11</sup>

E. THE SEVEN PILLAR EDICTS

I

- 1 Devānaṁpiye Piyadasi lāja hevaṁ āhā saḍuvīsati-
 2 vasa-abhisitena me iyaṁ dhamma-lipi likhāpitā
 3 hidata-pālate dusam̐paṭipādaye aṇinata agāyā dhammakāmataṁ
 4 agāya palikhāyā agāya su[sū]yāyā aḡena bhayenā
 5 aḡena usāhena
 esa chu kho mama anusathiyā
 6 dhammāpekhā dhamma-kāmataṁ chā suve suve vadhitā vadhīsati chevā
 7 pulisā pi cha me ukasā chā gevayā chā majhīmā chā anuvi-dhīyaṁtī
 8 sam̐paṭipādayaṁtī chā alaṁ chapalaṁ samādapayitave hemevā aṁta-

<sup>1</sup> A mistake for vistatena ; vitthaṇenā (K. and J.) ; vistritena (S.).

<sup>2</sup> Hi = for, in other versions.

<sup>3</sup> Gaṭite in S., a mistake for ghatite.

<sup>4</sup> K. adds after this the word nikyaṁ = nityaṁ, constantly.

<sup>5</sup> Instead of eta kaṁ, K. has hetā, S. and M. have atra.

<sup>6</sup> Lapitaṁ (S.).

<sup>7</sup> Yena in K., S., and M.

<sup>8</sup> There are the following variants for tatra ekadā :

K. se śāyā ata k[i]chhi

S. so siyā va atra kiche

D. } e pi chu hetā asaṁati
 and J. }

<sup>9</sup> Diśā (K.), deśaṁ (S.).

<sup>10</sup> Sam̐khaya (S. and M.), saṁkheye (K.).

<sup>11</sup> Dipikarasa va aparadhena (S.).

LINE

- 9 mahāmātā pi
 esa hi vidhi yā iyaṃ dhammena pālanā dhammena vidhāne
 10 dhammena sukhiyanā dhammena gotī ti

II

- 1 Devānaṃpiye Piyadasi lāja
 2 hevaṃ āhā
 dhamme sādhu kiyaṃ chu dhamme ti apāsinave bahu kayāne
 3 dayā dāne sache sochaye chakhu-dāne pi me bahuvidhe dimne dupada-
 4 chatupadesu pakhi-vālichaesu vividhe me anugahe kaṭe ā pāna-
 5 dākhināye
 amnāni pi cha me bahūni kayānāni kaṭāni
 etāye me
 6 aṭhāye iyaṃ dhamma-lipi likhāpitā hevaṃ anupaṭipajamtu chilam-
 7 thitikā cha hotū tī ti ye cha hevaṃ saṃpaṭipajīsati se sukaṭam kachhatī ti

III

- 1 Devānaṃpiye Piyadasi lāja hevaṃ ahā kayānaṃmeva dekhati iyaṃ me
 2 kayāne kaṭe ti
 no mina pāpaṃ d[e]khati iyaṃ me pāpe kaṭe ti iyaṃ vā āsinave
 3 nāmā ti
 dupaṭivekke chu kho esā hevaṃ chu kho esa dekhiye
 imānī
 4 āsinava-gāmīni nāma atha chaḍmiye niṭhūliye kodhe māne isyā
 5 kālanena va hakaṃ mā palibhasayisaṃ esa bādha dekhiye
 iyaṃ me
 6 hidatikāye iyaṃmana me pālatikāye

IV

LINE

- 1 Devānaṃpiye Piyadasi l[ā]ja hevaṃ āhā
    saduvīsati-vasa-
 2 abhisitena me iyaṃ dhamma-lipi likhāpitā lajūkā me
 3 bahūsu pāna-sata-sahasasu janasi āyatā
    tesaṃ ye abhihāle vā
 4 daṃḍe vā ata-patiye me kaṭe kiṃti lajūkā asvatha abhītā
 5 kaṃmāni pavatayevū janasa jānapadasā hita-sukhaṃ upadahevū
 6 anugahinevu chā
    sukhiyana-dukkhiyanam jānisaṃti dhamma-yutena cha 7 viyovadisamti janam jānapadam kiṃti hidatam cha pālataṃ
    cha
 8 ālādhayevū ti lajūkā pi laghamti paṭichalitave maṃ pulisāni pi me
 9 chhamdamnāni paṭichalisamti te pi cha kāni viyovadisamti yena maṃ lajūkā 10 chaghamti ālādhayitave
    athā hi pajam viyatāye dhātiye nisijitu 11 asvathe hoti viyata dhāti chaghati me pajam sukhaṃ palihaṭave
 12 hevaṃ mamā lajūkā kaṭā jānapadasa hita-sukhāye
    yena ete abhītā
 13 asvatha samtam avimanā kaṃmāni pavatayevū ti etena me lajūkānam
 14 abh[i]hāle va daṃḍe vā ata-patiye kaṭe ichhitaviye [h]i esā kiṃti
 15 viyohāla-samatā cha siya daṃḍa-samatā chā ava ite pi cha me āvuti 16 baṃdhana-badhānam munisānam tīl[i]ta-daṃḍānam pata-vadhānam timni divasā[n]i me 17 yote dimne
    nātikā va kāni nijhapayisamti jivitāye tānam 18 nāsamtam vā nijhapayitā<sup>1</sup> dānam dāhamti pālatakam upavāsam va kachhamti
 19 ichhā hi me hevaṃ niludhasi pi kālasi pālataṃ ālādhayevū ti janasa cha
 20 vadhati vividhe dhamma-chalane samyame dāna-savibhāge ti

<sup>1</sup> Nijhapayitave in the three Bihar P.E.

V

LINE

- 1 Devānampiye Piyadasi lāja hevaṃ ahā
saḍuvīsati-vasa-
- 2 abhisitena me imāni jātāni avadhiyāni kaṭāni seyathā
- 3 suke sālīkā alune chakavāke haṃse naṃdīmukhe gelāṭe
- 4 jatūkā aṃbā-kapīlikā daḷī anaṭhika-machhe vedaveyake
- 5 Gaṃgā-pupuṭake saṃkuja-machhe kaphaṭ[a]-sayake paṃna-sase simale
- 6 saṃḍake okapiṃḍe palasate seta-kapote gāma-kapote
- 7 save chatupade ye paṭibhogam no eti na cha khādiyati
..... i<sup>1</sup>
- 8 [e]lakā chā sūkālī chā gabhinī va pāyamīnā va avadhi[y.
p.ta]ke<sup>2</sup>
- 9 pi cha kāni āsaṃmāsike
vadhi-kukuṭe no kaṭaviye
tuse sajiṃve
- 10 no jhāpetaviye
dāve anaṭhāye vā vihisāye vā no jhāpetaviye
- 11 jīvena jīve no pusitaviye
tisu chātummasīsu tisāyam<sup>3</sup> puṃnamāsīyam
- 12 timni divasāni chāvudasaṃ paṃnadasaṃ paṭipadāy[e]
dhuvāye chā
- 13 anuposathaṃ machhe avadhiye no pi viketaviye
etāni yevā divasāni
- 14 nāga-vanasi kevaṭa-bhogasi yāni aṃnāni pi jīva-nikāyāni
- 15 no haṃtaviyāni
aṭhamī-pakhāye chāvudasāye paṃnaḍasāye tisāye
- 16 punāvasune tisū chātummasīsu sudivasāye gone no nīla-khitaviye
- 17 ajake edake sūkale e vā pi aṃne nīlakhiyati no nīlakhitaviye
- 18 tisāye punāvasune chātummasīye chātummasī-pakhāye asvasā gonasā
- 19 lakhane no kaṭaviye
yāva-saḍuvīsati-vasa-abhisitena me etāye
- 20 aṃtalikāye paṃnavīsati baṃdhana-mokhāni kaṭāni

<sup>1</sup> Ajakā nāni in three other versions.

<sup>2</sup> Restore avadhiyā potake.

<sup>3</sup> From tisā = tiṣyā; other versions use the form tisiyam from tisi.

VI

LINE

- 1 Devānampiye Piyadasi lāja hevaṃ ahā
     duvāḍasa-
 2 vasa-abhisitena me dhamma-lipi likhāpitā lokasā
 3 hita-sukhāye se taṃ apahaṭā taṃ taṃ dhamma-vaḍhi pāpovā
 4 hevaṃ lokasā hita-[sukhe] ti paṭivekhāmi atha iyaṃ
 5 nātisu hevaṃ patiyāsaṃnesu hevaṃ apakaṭhesu
 6 kimam<sup>1</sup> kāni sukhaṃ avahāmi ti tatha cha vidahāmi hemevā
 7 sava-nikāyesu paṭivekhāmi
     sava-pāsaṃdā pi me pūjitā
 8 vividhāya pūjāyā
     e chu iyaṃ at[a] nā pachūpagamane
 9 se me mokhya-mate
     saḍuvīsati-vasa-abhisitena me
 10 iyaṃ dhamma-lipi likhāpitā

VII

- 1 Devānampiye Piyadasi lājā hevaṃ āhā
     ye atikaṃtaṃ
 2 aṃtalaṃ lājāne husu hevaṃ ichhisu kathaṃ jane
 3 dhamma-vaḍhiyā vaḍheyā no chu jane anulupāyā dhammavaḍhiyā
 4 vadhithā
     etaṃ Devānampiye Piyadasi lājā hevaṃ āhā esa me
 5 huthā
     atikaṃtaṃ cha aṃtaṃl[a]ṃ<sup>2</sup> hevaṃ ichhisu lājāne kathaṃ jane 6 anulupāyā dhamma-vaḍhiyā vaḍheyā ti no cha jane anulupāyā
 7 dhamma-vaḍhiyā vaḍhithā
     se kinasu jane anu[pa]ṭipajeyā
 8 kinasu jane anulupāyā dhamma-vaḍhiyā vaḍheyā ti k[i]nasu kāni
 9 abhyurṇāmaychaṃ dhamma-vaḍhiyā ti etaṃ Devānampiye Piyadasi lājā hevaṃ

<sup>1</sup> Kimam in the Bihar versions.<sup>2</sup> A mistake for aṃtalaṃ.

LINE

10 āhā

esa me huthā

dhamma-sāvanāni sāvāpayāmi dhammānusathini

11 anus[ā]sāmi

etaṃ jane sutu anupaṭipajīsati abhyuṃnamisati

12 dhamma-vadhiyā cha bādham vadhisat[i] etāve me aṭhāye dhamma-sāvanāni sāvāpitāni dhammānusathini vividhāni ānapitāni [ya] . . . . [is]ā<sup>1</sup> pi bahune janasi āyatā e te paliyovadisanti pi pavithalisanti pi lajūkā pi bahukesu pāna-sata-sahasesu āyatā te pi me ānapitā hevaṃ cha hevaṃ cha paliyovadātha

13 janam dhamma-yu[ta]m

[Dev]ānaṃpiye Piyadasi hevaṃ āhā

etameva me anuve-khamāne dhamma-thambhāni kaṭāni dhamma-mahāmātā kaṭā dham[ina] . ā . . . e<sup>2</sup> kaṭe

Devānaṃpiye Piyadasi lājā hevaṃ āhā magesu pi me nigohāni lopāpitāni chhāyopagāni hosanti pasu-munisānam ambā-vadikyā lopāpitā adha-[kos]ikyāni pi me udupānāni

14 khānāpāpitāni nimsi[dha]yā cha kālāpitā āpānāni me ba[h]ukāni tata tata k[ā]lāpitāni paṭibho-gāye

p[a]su-munisānam

[la] . . . . .<sup>3</sup> esa paṭibhoge nāma vividhāyā hi sukhāyanāyā pulimehi pi lājīhi mamayā cha sukhayite loke

imaṃ chu dhammānupaṭipatī anupaṭipajamtu ti etadathā me

15 esa kaṭe

Devānaṃpiye Piyadasi hevaṃ āhā

dhamma-mahāmātā pi me te bahuvidhesu aṭhesu ānuga-hikesu viyāpaṭāse pavajītānam cheva gihithānam cha sava . . . [d]esu<sup>4</sup> pi cha viyāpaṭāse samghaṭhasi pi me kaṭe ime viyāpaṭā hohanti ti hemeva bābhanesu Ā[j]ivikesu pi me kaṭe

16 ime viyāpaṭā hohanti ti Nigamṭhesu pi me kaṭe ime viyāpaṭā hohanti nānā-pāsamdesu pi me [ka]ṭe ime viyāpaṭā hohanti ti paṭivisiṭham paṭivisiṭham tesu tesu [te] . . . . .

mātā<sup>5</sup>

dhamma-mahāmātā chu me etesu cheva viyā[pa]ṭā savesu

<sup>1</sup> Restore yathā pulisā.<sup>2</sup> I.e., dhamma-sāvane.<sup>3</sup> Restore lahuke chu.<sup>4</sup> Restore sava-pāsamdesu.<sup>5</sup> Restore te te mahāmātā.

LINE

cha amnesu pāsāṃdesu

Devānaṃpiye Piyaḍasi lājā hevaṃ āhā

17 ete cha amne cha bahukā mukhā dāna-visagasi viyāpatāse mama cheva devinaṃ cha savasi cha me olodhanasi te bahuvidhena ā[kā]lena tāni tāni tuṭhāyatan[ā]ni paṭi
.....<sup>1</sup> hida cheva disāsu cha dālakānaṃ pi cha me kaṭe amnānaṃ cha devi-kumālānaṃ ime dāna-visagesu viyāpatā hohanāti ti

18 dhammāpadānaṭhāye dhammānupaṭipatiye esa hi dhammāpadāne dhammapaṭipati cha yā iyaṃ dayā dāne sache sochave madave sādha[v]e cha lokasa hevaṃ vadhisi ti Devānaṃpiye [P . . . . s. <sup>2</sup> l]ājā hevaṃ āhā yāni hi [k]ānichi mamiyā sādhaṇāni kaṭāni taṃ loke anūp[a]ṭipamne taṃ cha anuvidhiyaṃti tena vadhitā cha

19 vadhisaṃti cha mātā-pit[i]su sususāyā gulusu sususāyā vayo-mahālakānaṃ anupaṭipatiyā bābhana-samanesu kapana-valākesu āva dāsa-bhaṭakesu saṃpaṭipatiyā

Devānaṃp[iy . . . ya]dasi <sup>3</sup> lājā hevaṃ āhā munisānaṃ chu yā iyaṃ dhamma-vadhi vadhitā duvehi yeva ākālehi dhamma-niyamena cha nijhatiyā [cha]

20 tata chu lahu se dhamma-niyame nijhatiyā va bhuye dhamma-niyame chu kho esa ye me iyaṃ kaṭe imāni cha imāni jātāni avadhiyāni amnāni pi chu bahu[k] . . . <sup>4</sup> dhamma-niyamāni yāni me kaṭāni

nijhatiyā va chu bhuye munisānaṃ dhamma-vadhi vadhitā avihimsāye bhutānaṃ

21 anālambhāye pānānaṃ

se etāye a[th]āye iyaṃ kaṭe putāpapotike chaṃdamasu-liyike hotu ti tathā cha anupaṭipajamtu ti hevaṃ hi anupaṭipajamtaṃ hi[da]ta-[pāla]te āladhe hoti satavisati-vasābhis[i]tena me iyaṃ dhamma-libi likhāpāpitā ti

etaṃ Devānaṃpiye āhā

iyaṃ

22 dhamma-libi ata athi silā-thambhāni vā silā-phalakāni vā
tata kaṭaviyā ena esa chila-ṭhitike siyā

<sup>1</sup> Paṭipādayaṃti according to Bühler; paṭivedayaṃtu.

<sup>2</sup> Restore Piyaḍasi.

<sup>3</sup> Restore -piye Piyaḍasi.

<sup>4</sup> Restore bahukāni.

F. THE FOUR MINOR PILLAR EDICTS

I

[SARNATH]

LINE

- 1 Devā<sup>1</sup> . . . . .
 2 el . . . . .
 3 Pāṭa<sup>2</sup> . . . . . ye<sup>3</sup> kenapi saṃghe bhetave
     e chuṃ kho
 4 [bhikh]ū [vā bhikh]uni vā saṃghaṃ bh[ākha]t[i]<sup>4</sup> s[e] odātāni dus[ān]i [sa]mnaṃdhāpayiyā ānāvāsasi 5 āvāsaiye
     hevaṃ iyaṃ sāsane bhikhu-saṃghasi cha bhikhunisaṃghasi cha vimnapayitave
 6 hevaṃ Devānaṃpiye āhā
     hedisā cha ikā lipī tuphākāntikaṃ huvāti saṃsalanasi nikhitā
 7 ikaṃ cha lipiṃ hedisameva upāsakānaṃtikaṃ nikhipātha te pi cha upāsakā anuposathaṃ yāvu
 8 etameva sāsanaṃ visvaṃsayitave anuposathaṃ cha dhuvāye ikike mahāmāte posathāye
 9 yāti etameva sāsanaṃ visvaṃsayitave ājānitave cha āvate cha tuphākāṃ āhāle
 10 savata vivāsayaṭha tuphe etena viyaṃjanena hemeva savesu koṭa-viṣavesu etena
 11 viyaṃjanena vivāsāpayāthā

II

[KAUSĀMBĪ]

- 1 [Devānaṃ][p]iye ānapayati
     Kosaṃbiyaṃ mahām[ā]ta
 2 . . . . . [sa]ma[ge ka]te sa[m]gh[a]si no l[a]hiye
 3 . . . . . [saṃghaṃ bhā]khati bhikh[u] v[ā] bhikh[u]ni vā [se pi] chā
 4 [o]dāt[ā]ni dusāni [sa]naṃdhāpayitu a[nāvā]sas[i ā]v[ā]- sayiy[e]

<sup>1</sup> Restore Devānaṃpiya.<sup>2</sup> I.e., Pāṭaliputra.<sup>3</sup> Restored by Boyer as "na sakiye."<sup>4</sup> Read by Venis.

III

[SĀÑCHĪ]

LINE

- I .....
 2 .. [y]ā bhe[ta] .. <sup>1</sup>
     .. [gh]e <sup>2</sup> . . . . mage <sup>3</sup> kaṭe
 3 [bhi]khūna[m̐] cha bhi[khun]īnaṃ ch[ā] ti [p]uta-pa-
 4 [po]tike chaṃ[da]m[a-sū]ri[yi]ke ye saṃghaṃ
 5 bh[ā]khati bhikhu vā bhikhuni vā odātā-
 6 ni dus[ān]i sanaṃ[dhāpay]itu aṇā[vā]-
 7 sasi vā[sā]petaviy[e]
     ichhā hi me kiṃ-
 8 ti saṃghe samage chila-thitīke siyā ti;

IV

[QUEEN'S EDICT]

- 1 Devānaṃpiyaṣā v[a]chanenā savata mahamatā 2 vataviyā.
     e hetā dutiyāye devīye dāne
 3 aṃbā-vaḍikā vā ālame va dāna-[gah]e [va e vā pi a]mne
 4 kīchhi ganīyati tāye devīye ṣe nāni
     [he]vaṃ . . [na] . . <sup>4</sup>
 5 dutiyāye devīye ti Tīvala-mātu Kāluvākiye

G. THE COMMEMORATIVE PILLAR INSCRIPTIONS

I

[RUMMINDEI]

- 1 Devāna[pi]yena Piyadasina lājina vīsati-vasābhisitena
 2 atana āgācha mahīyite hida Budhe jāte Sakyamunī ti
 3 silā vigaḍabhī chā kālāpita silā-thabhe cha usapāpīte
 4 hida Bhagavaṃ jāte ti
     Lummini-gāme ubalike kaṭe
 5 aṭha-bhāgiye cha

<sup>1</sup> Restore bhetave, as in Sar. M.P.E, l. 3.<sup>2</sup> Restore saṃghe.<sup>3</sup> Restore samage, as in l. 8.<sup>4</sup> Hultsch restores vinati = Sans. vijñapti.

II

[NIGLIVA]

LINE

- 1 Devānaṃpiyena Piyadasina lājina chodasavasā[bh]i- t[e]n[a]
2 Budhasa Konākamanasa thube dutiyaṃ vadhite
3 ..... sābhisitena <sup>1</sup> cha atana āgācha mahīyite
4 ..... pāpīte <sup>2</sup>

H. THE CAVE INSCRIPTIONS

I

[NIGRODHA]

- 1 lājina Piyadasinā duvāḍasa-[vasābhisitenā]
2. [iyaṃ Nigoha-]kubhā di[nā Ajīvikehi]

II

[KHALATIKA HILL]

- 1 lājina Piyadasinā duvā-
2 dasa-vasābhisitenā iyaṃ
3 kubhā Khalatika-pavatasi
4 dinā [Ājīvi]kehi

III

[KHALATIKA HILL, No. 2]

- 1 lāja Piyadasī ekunavī-
2 sati-vasā[bh]i[e] ja[lagh]o-
3 [sāgama]thāta [me] i[yaṃ kubhā]
4 su[p][i][y]e Kha ..... <sup>3</sup> [di]-
5 nā <sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Bühler restored vīsati-vasābhisitena, as in l. 1 of Rummindei P.I.

<sup>2</sup> Bühler restored silā-thabhe cha usapāpīte after l. 3 of Rum. P.I.

<sup>3</sup> Restore Khalatikapavatasi.

<sup>4</sup> At the end of the inscription are figured a svastika and a dagger with a fish below them. V. H. Jackson reads the fourth line as "supiye kha Ajīvikehi di-" [JBORS, xii. 52], on the ground that there is room in the vacant space of the inscription for only five and not ten letters as supposed by Hultzsck.

APPENDIX C

ON THE SCRIPT, DIALECT, AND GRAMMAR OF THE INSCRIPTIONS

THE Asokan Inscriptions are written in two scripts known as Kharoṣṭhi and Brāhmī. The former is a cursive script written from right to left, and is traced to a Semitic origin, the Aramaic script, in which wrote the clerks of the Achaemenian Emperor, Darius, of Persia, as distinguished from the monumental cuneiform in which are written that great emperor's inscriptions at Persepolis, Nakshi-rustam, or Behistun. Sylvain Levi calls the script Kharoṣṭri after the name of the country of Kharoṣṭra just outside India, where it was first traced. One peculiarity of this script is that it does not mark long vowels. Of the Asokan inscriptions, only those at Shahbazgarhi and Mansehra, and the short note of the scribe, Chapada, at the end of the Mysore versions of the Minor Rock Edict II, are written in this script.

The other inscriptions of Asoka are all written in the popular Brāhmī script running from left to right, the parent of all Indian scripts, including Burmese, Tibetan, and even Sinhalese. But even this script Bühler has sought to trace to a Semitic source, and its introduction in India to her trade with Mesopotamia dating from about 800 B.C. The connection of Brāhmī with a Semitic prototype is, however, far less obvious than that of Kharoṣṭhi with Aramaic, and is now being widely disputed. Cunningham first disputed it on the ground that Brāhmī, unlike the Semitic scripts, was always written from left to right. But Bühler has shown how Brāhmī, too, was originally written from right to left, of which relics are traced in even the Asokan inscriptions in the reversed forms of certain single letters like dh, t, and o, and of certain conjunct consonants like tṣa, sta, and vya, which are written as if they were pta, tṣa, and yva, or in such words as dhrama, krama, and mrugo for dharma, karma, and murgo. The theory of the indigenous origin of the Brāhmī has, nevertheless, been stoutly maintained by some scholars on the strength of certain prehistoric writings traced on primitive pottery recently

PLATE XV.

a	ā	i	u	e	o	ka	kha	ga	gha	cha
𑀀	𑀁	𑀂	𑀃	𑀄	𑀅	𑀆	𑀇	𑀈	𑀉	𑀊
chha	ja	jha	ñā	ṭa	ṭha	ḍa	dha	ṇa	ṭa	ṭha
𑀋	𑀌	𑀍	𑀎	𑀏	𑀐	𑀑	𑀒	𑀓	𑀔	𑀕
da	dha	na	pa	pha	ba	bha	ma	ya	ra	ṭa
𑀖	𑀗	𑀘	𑀙	𑀚	𑀛	𑀜	𑀝	𑀞	𑀟	𑀠
va	ṣa	ṣa	ṣa	ha	kaṁ	kā	ki	ki	ku	kū
𑀡	𑀢	𑀣	𑀤	𑀥	𑀦	𑀧	𑀨	𑀩	𑀪	𑀫
ke	ko	ḍim	sū	khu	ṭā	jā	mī	mo	ñe	ñā
𑀬	𑀭	𑀮	𑀯	𑀰	𑀱	𑀲	𑀳	𑀴	𑀵	𑀶
kya	kha	gya	vya	yva	sya	sva	dva	dba	mha	hma
𑀷	𑀸	𑀹	𑀺	𑀻	𑀼	𑀽	𑀾	𑀿	𑁀	𑁁 kraṁ tra dva ṭpa ṭva śla 4 6
𑁂	𑁃	𑁄	𑁅	𑁆	𑁇	𑁈	𑁉	𑁊	𑁋	𑁌
6	50	50	200	200
𑁍	𑁎	𑁏	𑁐	𑁑	𑁒

discovered in some cairns in the Nizam's dominion, which very closely resemble the Asokan characters.

It is, however, quite clear that for both the scripts and the alphabets in the developed forms in which they are found and used in the inscriptions of Asoka, we must allow for the time taken in such development. They must have been developing for centuries before we come to their finished forms in the time of Asoka. And this fact should be taken into account in its bearings on the origin of the Brāhmī script, on which there is besides a large body of very old evidence from a Vedic work like the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa which knows of distinctions of number and gender, from Pāṇini, and from the Vinaya Piṭaka, all pointing to the antiquity of writing in India.

The differences of form and grammar exhibited in the Edicts show that they were composed in two broadly distinguished dialects. One of these may be called the Eastern, represented in the Dhauli and Jaugada Rock Edicts, as also in most of the Pillar Edicts. It may be recognised by its chief peculiarities of having nom. sing. in e, l for r, loc. s. in -asi, and conjuncts assimilated. The other dialect may be called Western, and is represented in the Girnar version of the Edicts, with its special features, among them, of having nom. s. in o, the use of r, pr, tr, and loc. s. in -amhi.

The Eastern dialect was the standard and official language of Asoka's court, and served as a sort of lingua franca for his whole empire, admitting only of minor variations introduced by local speech, such as may be noticed in the language of the Kālsī Edicts in the north, and of Mysore in the south. Kālsī shows a tendency to lengthen the final a, and a peculiarity in its treatment of sibilants. The Mysore inscriptions do not substitute l for r, and use the palatal and cerebral nasals (as in ñātika, prānesu).

Of the Western language, the local variations are noticed in the Shahbazgarhi and Mansehra versions of the Edicts, where we find illustrated what was probably the official court language of the Viceroyalty of Taxila. One striking feature in the language of Girnar, Shahbazgarhi and Mansehra is its Sanskritisms such as priya, putra. This was due, however, not to the scribe's knowledge of Sanskrit, as is readily supposed, but because the local language of those places was in some respects more archaic, and, therefore, nearer to Sanskrit than Pāli or the Māgadhī of the Eastern inscriptions.

The Eastern, or the standard, language of the Asokan inscriptions may be described in a general way as Māgadhī, provided it is understood that it is not exactly the orthodox Māgadhi Prakrit of the grammar, or of the dramas. For instance, while Asoka's Māgadhi knows only of the dental sibilant as in susūsā (Kālsī, only, using ṣusūsā), the Māgadhi Prakrit proper has only the palatal sibilant (sussusā).

It is evident that the dialect of the Shahbazgarhi and Mansehra redactions is much nearer to Sanskrit than the dialects of the other versions of the fourteen edicts. At the same time, as Michelson has pointed out, this dialect cannot be regarded as a mere lineal descendant of Sanskrit. It presents certain forms which establish its affinity to Avestan rather than Sanskrit; e.g. atīkrātam (G.); susrusā, susrusatām (G.) corresponding to Avestan susrusemno; G. sruṇāru, Shb. śruṇeyu, and M. śruṇeyu, which agree with Avestan surunaoti in structure as opposed to Sans. śṛṇoti. Side by side with these archaic forms, this dialect also presents many recent ones, Māgadhisms, ear-marks of the Middle-Indic (Prakrit) stage of development, such as the assimilation of stops of one order to those of another order. These Māgadhisms occurring in the G., Shb., and M. recensions give the impression that they were simply taken over bodily from the original MS. and were really foreign to the spoken vernaculars of those localities. The original MS. of the edicts was composed in a dialect which was essentially the same as that represented in the Dhauli, Jaugada, and Kālsī recensions of the fourteen R.E., and in the six versions of the P.E. The Shb., Man., and Girnar redactions are translations, incorporating elements borrowed from this original, the Māgadhi dialect, the official imperial language, which must have been understood even where it was not spoken as a vernacular. It may be noted that there are traces of Middle-Indic even in the Rigveda so far as phonetics are concerned, while Epic Sanskrit teems with Middle-Indicisms morphologically. Thus the fact of the matter is that the dialect of Shb. and M. hardly belongs to the Middle-Indic (Prakrit) stage of development, and geographically this is just what may be expected.

Incidentally it may be noted that the theory generally held that during the period of the composition of the Vedic hymns two distinct groups of Indic dialects were developed and separated by an uncrossable gulf does not thus seem to be probable by this analogy of the Asokan dialects. If it is not possible to draw hard and fast lines in the time of Asoka, why should we assume such lines for earlier times? The conclusion of the matter, as put by Michelson, is that Sanskrit, though not in the very form in which it occurs in literature, was a truly spoken vernacular. Even the late classical Sanskrit cannot have been wholly artificial: the existence of such an enormous literature necessarily presupposes a large audience who normally spoke a language that did not differ from the written one too violently. That the audience belonged to cultivated circles of society goes without saying.

Thus the Asokan dialects throw interesting light on the obscure and difficult questions of the genetic relationship of the Middle-Indic (Prakrit) dialects [see Michelson's writings, specially in JAOS, 30 and 33, on which this note is based].

The dialectical peculiarities and variations of the inscriptions may be illustrated by the following typical examples :

Sanskrit	West Asokan	East Asokan
Mṛigah	Mago (G.), mrugo (S.)	Mige
Mayūrāḥ	Morā (G.), majura (S.)	Majulā
Vṛikṣāḥ	Vrachhā (G.) ruchhani (M.)	Lukhāni
Sthitvā	Tithiti (S.)	Chithitu
Chikitsā	Chikichha	Chikisa
Atra	Eta	Heta
Tādṛīśam	Tārise	Tādise
Pulindeṣu	Pārimdesu (G.)	Pāladṣeu (K.)
Ātyayikam	Āchāyike	Atiyāyike
Grihastha	Grahatha, gharasta	Gahatha
Mritam	Muṭe, matam	Maṭe
Vyuṣṭena		Vyuthenā, vivuthena
Vistṛitena	Vistatana (G.) vistritena (S.)	Vithaṭenā
Prithivyām		Puṭhaviyam
Adhikriyta		Adhigichiya
Parityajya	Parichajitpā (G.) paritijitu (S.)	Palitiditu, palitijitu
Toṣaḥ	Toso	Dose (K.)
Duṣprativekṣyam		Dupaṭivekhe
Nityam	Niche (?)	Nikyam (K.)
Satyam		Nicham
Duṣkara	Dukare dukaram	Sache
Avarodhane	Orodhanamhi (G.), orodhanaspi (S.)	Dukale, dukalam
Kṣudraka	Chhudaka (G.), Khudraka (S.)	Olodhanasi
Iha	Idha, ia, hida	Khudaka
Kṣamitum	Chhamitave, Kṣamanaye	Idā, hida Khamitave

It is to be noted that these dialectical differences are merely phonetic differences, and not any fundamental differences of grammar. Both the Western and Eastern dialects come under a common grammar, the grammar of the Magadhan court language of Pāṭaliputra. This grammar may be outlined as follows with reference to the declension of (a) Nouns and Adjectives, (b) Pronouns, (c) Numerals, and (d) Verbs, as illustrated in the inscriptions. From this outline are omitted those forms which do not show any departure from Sanskrit.

(a) NOUNS AND ADJECTIVES

I. MASCULINE AND NEUTER

	Nom.	Acc.	Ins.	Dot.	Abl.	Gen.	Loc.
(i.) In -a :
Sing.	Samāje <sup>1</sup> phale (n.)	Janam pāpam (n.)	Dhammena	Athāye <sup>2</sup>	Viyam- janate <sup>3</sup>	Janasa	Vijitisi <sup>4</sup>
Plur.	Aṇṭā lukhāni <sup>5</sup> (n.)	Pulisāni yutāni <sup>6</sup> (n.)	Devehi	—	—	Devānaṁ	Athesu
(ii.) In -i :
Sing.	Piyadasi, asamati (n.)	—	Piyadasinā	Piyadasine	Suvaṁna- girite <sup>7</sup>	—	—
Plur.	Asinava- gāmīni (n.)	Hathīni	Lājīhi	—	—	Nātināṁ	Nātisu
(iii.) In -u :
Sing.	Sādhu, bahu (n.)	—	—	—	Hetute <sup>7</sup>	—	Punāvasune bahune (n.)
Plur.	Bahūni (n.)	—	Bahūhi	—	—	Gulūnaṁ	Gulusu, bahūsu (n.)
(iv.) In -an :
Sing.	Lājā, kaṁme (n.)	Atānam, nāma (n.)	Lājīnā <sup>8</sup> atanā, kaṁmana (n.)	Lājine, atane, kaṁnane (n.)	— —	Lājine, <sup>9</sup> atane, kaṁmasa (n.)	—
Plur.	Lājāne	kaṁmāni (n.)	Lājīhi	—	—	—	—
v.) In -r :
Sing.	Pitā, būt nati, panati	—	Pitinā bhātinā	—	—	Mātu	Matari, pitari
Plur.	Natāle	—	—	—	—	Nātināṁ, bhātinam	Pitisu, nātisu
(vi.) In -s :
Sing.	Yaso (n.) būt bhūye	—	—	Dighāvuse	—	—	—

<sup>1</sup> M. has -a in Kartabhikara. S. and G. have usually -o : e.g. samājo, jano. K. also has Satiya-puto, Ketalaputo.

As regards neut., we have such forms as sachān (Br.), anusāsanaṁ (K.), danā (Mas.), sasana (M.). S. and G. have usually -am.

<sup>2</sup> G. has -āya as in athāya.

<sup>3</sup> S., M., G. have -to as in mukhato; G. has vyamjanato.

<sup>4</sup> Also vijite (S.), vijitamhi (G.) and vijayaspi, vinilaspi (M. and G.). G. has also Pāṭalipute.

<sup>5</sup> We have also such forms as jātā, hālāpitā, lopāpitā as nom. pl., neut

<sup>6</sup> G. has yute.

<sup>7</sup> S., G. have hetuto.

<sup>8</sup> Rāṇa (G.).

<sup>9</sup> Rāṇo (G.).

2. FEMININE

	Nom.	Acc.	Ins.	Dat.	Abl.	Gen.	Loc.
(i.) In -ā :
Sing.	Susūsā	Susūsānī	Susūsāyā	Vāsaniṣḍi- yāye	Takhasilāte	Dutiyāye	Samāpāya tisāyam, tisāye, palisāye, parisāve, parisāyam
Plur.	Am̐bā- vadikā, upāsikā, chikisā palisā, mahidāyo (G.)	—	—	—	—	—	—
(ii.) In -ī :
Sing.	Ithī, piti, vaḥī	Sam̐bodhi, but chhātīm	Nijhatiyā, bhatiyā	Vadhiye, vadhiyā (K.)	Ujenite	Deviye	Kosam̐biyā Tosaliyam Tisāyam
Plur.	Nimsidhiyā	Dham̐ma- nusathini	—	—	—	Devinām, bhāginīnam bhaginīnā	Chatum- māsisa,

(b) PRONOUNS

	Nom.	Acc.	Ins.	Dat.	Abl.	Gen.	Loc.
(i.) 1st Person :
Sing.	Hakām, aham (S., M., G.)	Marī	Me, mayā, maya, mamayā	—	Mamate	Me, mama	—
Plur.	Maye	Aphe, apheni, ne (G.)	—	—	—	Aphākam,	Aphesu ne (→no)
(ii.) 2nd Person :
Plur.	Tuphe	Tuphe, tupheni, ve	—	Ve	—	Tuphākam tupaka (Ru.)	Tuphesu
(iii.) Demonstrative Pronoun, ta-, etā- :
Sing.
Masc.	Se, So (S., G.), ese	Etām, tam	Etena, etinā (Ru.), tena	Etāye, etiya (Ru.), taye, etāya (G.)	—	Etasa, etisa (S.), tasa, (tāsa, taśā, K.)	Tasi, etan̐hi, tam̐hi (G.), tasi (K.)
Fem.	Esā sā	Tam̐	—	Tāye	—	—	—
Neut.	Se, ese, esa, etam̐ (S.)	Etām, tam̐, se	—	—	—	—	—
Plur.
Masc.	Se, te, ete	—	Tehi	—	—	Etānam̐, tesam̐, tesam̐ (S.) tānam̐	Etesu, tesu
Fem.	Esā, tā (esa)	—	—	—	—	—	—
Neut.	Etāni tāni	—	—	—	—	—	—

	Nom.	Acc.	Ins.	Dat.	Gen.	Loc.
(iv.) Demonstrative Pronoun, ayam, ima, etc. :
Sing.
Masc.	Iyañ ayo (S.) ayañ (G.)	Imañ	Imena, iminā (G., Br., Sd.)	Imāye, imāya	Imasa imisa (S.)	Imamhi (G.)
Fem.	Iyañ ayañ (S., G.) ayi (S., M.)	Imañ	—	Imāye, imāya	—	—
Neut.	Iyañ iya (S., M.), iyo (S.), imañ, idañ (S., G.)	Imañ, iyañ, idañ	—	—	—	Imasi
Plur.
Masc.	Ime	—	Imehi	—	—	—
Neut.	Imāni	—	—	—	—	—
(v.) Relative Pronoun :
Sing.
Masc.	ye, e, yo (S., G.)	yañ	vena ena	—	yasa, asa, asā (K.)	—
Fem.	yā, ā	yañ	—	—	—	—
Neut.	Ye, e, yam (ya) am	ye, e yañ (ya), am	—	—	—	—
Plur.
Masc.	Ye, e	—	—	—	Yesam	Yesu
Fem.	Yā (G.)	—	—	—	—	—
Neut.	Yāni āni	—	—	—	—	—

(c) NUMERALS

½, aḥha.	10, dasa,
1, eke,	daśa (S., M.).
ikañ (Sn.).	12, duvāḍasa,
1½, diyaḍha-	dbāḍasa (G.),
2, duve,	badaya (S.)
duvi (S.),	= badaśa (Hlz.).
dvo, dve (G.).	13, tedasa, tredaśa (M.).
2½, aḥhātiyāni.	13, chāvudasañ, chodasa (Nig.).
3, tinnī,	15, pañnaḍasa, pañchadasa.
trayo (S.),	19, ekunavisati.
tri (G.).	20, visati.
4, chatu,	25, pañnavisati.
chatāli,	26, saḍḍvisati.
chature (S.),	27, satavisati.
chatpāro (G.).	56, sapamñā- (?).
5, pañchasu	100, sata-, śata (S., M.).
(loc.).	1000, sahasāni, śaḥṣa (K.),
6, ṣaṣu (S., M., K., loc.).	sahasra (S., M., G.).
8, aḥha, asta (S.).

(d) VERBS

1. Present Indicative :

	1st Person.	2nd Person.	3rd Person.
Sing.	Ichhāmi	—	Ichhati, mainnate ( ālmanepadam ) dukhīyati ( passive )
Plur.	—	Pāpunātha	Ichhamti, ālabhiyamti ārabhare (G.), ( passive ).

2. Imperative :

Sing.	—	—	Susūsatu, susrusatām ( ātm. ).
Plur.	—	Lekhāpayāthā	Anupaṭipajāmtu, also paṭivedetu

3. Optative :

Sing.	Ālabheham, vracheyam	—	Paṭipajeya, paṭipajetha ( ātm. ).
Plur.	Paṭipādayema	—	Pāpunevu, pāpuneyu (J.), sususera ( ātm. ), hamñeyasu ( passive ).

4. Aorist :

Sing.	Husam	—	Nikhami, nikhamithā, vaḍhithā, huthā ( ātm. ).
Plur.	—	—	Nikhamisu, niyāsu, locheṣu, husu, ālabhiyisu ( passive ).

5. Future :

Sing.	Nikhāmayisāmi, likhāpayisam (G.)	—	Vaḍhisati.
Plur.	—	—	Vaḍhisamti, ārabhisare ( passive ).

6. Perfect, of which the only examples are "āhā" and "ayāya."

7. Causative : vaḍhayati, vaḍhetti; ānapayāmi; anapemi; vivā-sāpayāthā (imperative pl.).

8. Participle. (i) Present Active : Sing. Nom. anupaṭipajāmtam, samntam (samto, G., sato, S.); G. has karoto, karāto (from "karanto") and karu = karum (tathā karu, acting thus, from "kurvan"); Gen., asatasa; Plur., tiṣṭamto.

(ii) Ālmanepadam : bhumjamānasa (gen.), samānā (nom. pl.)— "amisā samānā munisā"; also in "mina," like pakamaminenā, sampaṭipajamīne, vipaṭipādayamīnehi.

Present Passive : vijinamane, anuvekhamāne.

(iii) Past Participles : (a) tilita, (b) upagate, vistrīta (S.), (c) āyatā, nikhitā, yutaṁ, āladhe, (d) diṁne, dinā.

(iv) Past Participles Causative : (a) sāvite, sukhayite, (b) likhāpitā, nijhapayitā, (c) sāvāpīte (double caus.).

(v) Future Participles Passive : (a) from "tavyam" : kaṭaviye, sotaviyā (fem.), haṁtaviyāni (neut. pl.) ; causative—nijhapetaviye, vāsāpetaviye ; G. has "-tavyam," as in prajāhitavyam, lochetavyā (fem.), katavyo (mas.) ; S. has kaṭava, prayuhotave. (b) From "-anīya" : asvāsaniyā. (c) From "ya" : kacham, dekhiye, chakiye, pūjetayā (G.) = pūjayitavya.

9. Infinitive : (a) nijhapayitave, ālādhayitave, pāpotave ; (b) ārādhetu (G.) from acc. "-tum."

10. Gerund : paritijitu, kaṭu, sutu, saṁnamdhāpayitu (from "-tvā"), but G. has "-tpa" as in parichajitpā, dasayitpā, alochetpā, ārabhitpā ; S. has an additional form in "-ti," as in tistiti, alocheti, draṣeti (M.). We have also a few forms from "-ya, -tya," as in āgacha, adhigichya, apahaṭa.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> This note is based on the masterly and comprehensive study of the subject contained in Hultsch's Corpus I. I. vol. i. chh. vi-xi, and is also indebted to the outline of Asokan Grammar forming pp. xxv-xxxvii of Woolner's Asoka Text and Glossary.

INDEX

- Accession and coronation dates, 11, 37, 39-41, 44
Administration, Asoka on, 121-2
Administrative orders, 55
Aged and infirm (see Old)
Agnibrahmā, nephew of Asoka, 8, 9, 10, 45, 110 n.
Ajantā, fresco at, 36
Ājīvika, 3, 31, 65, 101, 190, 210; caves granted to, 37, 64, 81, 89, 205, 206
Akbar, emperor, 1, 14, 86, 199 n.
Alakadeva, 33
Alexander of Epirus, 29, 40, 166
Alfred, of England, 2
Aliya-vasāni, 67, 118
Allahabad, Asokan pillar at, inscribed by Gupta emperor, 88 n.
Allahabad-Kosam Pillar, viii, 15, 86, 199 n.
Almshouses, 200
Ambassadors or envoys (dūtas) to foreign states, 29, 30, 34 n., 36, 38, 56, 78 n., 165-9; first political, then religious, 169 n.
Anāgata-bhayāni, 67, 118
Ānanda, 27
Anantavarman, king, 89
Andhras, 21, 29, 168
Animal fights, 129 n., 130 n.
Animal branding and castration restricted, 21-2, 184; — life, sacred, 72, 175; — slaughter prohibited, 20, 21-2, 39, 43, 62, 66, 69, 180-4, 192, 193, 211
Animals, kindness to, 22, 70, 72, 103, 175
Anta-Mahāmātras, 42, 56, 173, 211
Antas, 14 n., 140 n., 166-7 n., 211 (see Borderers)
Antelopes or deer, 20, 38, 62, 130, 182 n., 211
Antigonos Gonatas of Macedonia, 29, 56, 166
Antiochos Soter, 78 n.
Antiochos Theos of Syria, 15, 29, 38, 56, 166
Āpagīva, 35
Aparānta or Aparāntaka, Western India, 33, 34, 104, 140, 167 n., 168 n.
Arachosia, 12, 15
Aramaic script, 246
Aria, 12, 15
Arthur of Britain, 1
Asandhimitrā, chief Queen of Asoka, 8, 9, 45, 46
Asceticism in Asoka's time, 103-4
Ascetics (Brāhmaṇas and Śramaṇas), Asoka and, 20, 39, 65, 77, 152, 190, 210; behaviour to, 69, 70, 103, 135, 141, 155, 158, 163, 192; classes of, 141-2 n.; five ways of serving, 135 n., 141-2; none among Yonas, 164
Asoka, the Righteous King (105): not fully interpreted, vii; place in history, 1, 104-5; in legend, 1-2, 104-5; inscriptions as autobiography, 2; parentage, 2-3; Ājīvika influence on parents, 3; Viceroy at Ujjain or Taxila, 3, 4, 51, 125; seizes and holds throne at Pāṭaliputra, 3, 44; disputed succession, 3, 4, 44; legends of criminality and their motive, 4-5, 62; love for relatives shown in legends and Edicts, 5-7, 71-2, 116, 135, 136, 137, 143-4, 158, 163, 190-1, 200-1; brothers as Viceroys, 6, 51, 123, 125 n.; relations with younger brother, 6-7; brother as Vice-regent and monk, 7, 44, 45, 51-2, 63; family and connections, 7-9; domestic and public events dated, 9-10, 37, 39-41,

44-6, 214; age at accession and coronation, 11; royal titles and their origin, 11-12, 105, 108; empire, extent of, 13-16, 50, 144, 171; tours of inspection, 16, 20, 50, 55, 152; war with Kalinga—Asoka on war's cruelties, 16-17, 37, 162-5; embraces Dharma and non-violence, 17-18, 20-1, 22-3, 76 n., 108-9, 162-3, 165-6, 213-14; conversion to Buddhism, 17-18, 23, 37, 41, 45, 62-4, 108-9, 214; propagandist activities, 18, 108-9, 162-3; conception of the Edicts, 18-19, 25-6, 185, 186-8; changes in life and habits, 19-20, 61, 130, 150-1, 185; cruel amusements (merry-makings) prohibited, 20, 38, 62, 129-30; eschews politics for religion—bases empire on Right, not Might, 20-1, 22-3, 167-9; prohibits animal slaughter, 20, 21, 38, 39, 61, 66, 128-30, 135, 137, 158, 175, 180-2; restricts branding, castration, fish-killing, etc., 21-2, 39, 61, 183-4; humanitarian measures—public works, 22, 38, 39, 131-2, 188-9; not a monk, but server and temporal ruler of the Saṃgha, 23-4, 45, 46, 63-4, 109, 110 n., 117-19, 190, 193, 194, 199-200; Buddhist propaganda — processions and shows, 24-5, 39, 136-7; "pious tours" instituted, 26-8, 39, 46, 61, 63, 150-3; periodical tours by officials, 28-9, 38, 123-6, 133-4; Welfare Officials, Dharma-Mahāmāyās, an Asokan conception, 29-31, 37, 38-9, 40, 42, 43, 54, 56, 61, 74, 139-44, 188, 194-6; supervisors of women, 31, 39, 43, 56, 143-4, 160, 190-1; missions of peace, goodwill and social service to foreign countries, 29, 31-2, 35-6, 38, 56, 77-8, 139-41, 165-6; missions—details from the legends, 32-4; missions—evidence of relics and inscriptions, 34-5; sea-going fleet,

36; publication of Edicts dated, 36, 37, 214; measures passed before the Edicts, 38-9; chronology from Edicts, 36-7, 39-43, 214, and from legends, 44-6; death of Asoka, 37, 46; tradition of his last days, 37 n.; his Civil Service, 42, 56-7, 58, 127, 146, 160, 173, 177, 187; builder of viḥāras and chaityas, 45, 79, 80-1, 82-3, 152 n.; a self-limited autocrat, paternal monarch and hard-working king, 48-9, 50, 144-8, 151-2; government, imperial and local—his personal share, 54-5; King's council or cabinet, 55, 135, 147-8; fear of schism, 55, 64, 68; orders against schism, 193-8, 199, 200; King's orders—how issued, 55; frontier policy and administration, 57-8, 123-6, 126-8; imperial policy, 58-9, 127, 136, 165-6; personal religion—Buddhism, 60-4, 68-9, 108-9, 170 n., 183-4, 190; public religion—Toleration, 64-6, 68, 72-3, 101, 111-12 n., 135, 136, 149, 152, 155, 160, 185, 190, 192; Dharma of the Edicts—moral law—essence of all religions, 68-78, 101; originality of Asoka's message and terminology, 72-5, 113, 138, 154-5, 156, 157, 157-8, 159-60, 173-4, 175-6, 192; his belief in the other world, 75, 121, 149, 156, 169, 170, 172, 180, 193; his Dharma the basis of a universal religion, 75-7, 159-61; as builder and improver of cities, 79-80, 94-6; stūpas or topes, 80-3, 88, 105-6; pillars and their transport, 83-8, 89-92, 92-3; cave dwellings, 89, 205, 206; irrigation works, 93-4; capital, palace and park at Pāṭaliputra, 94-7; Asokan art, essentially Indian, 98-100; social conditions of his time, 101-6

Aśoka-avadāna, 4, 179 n.

Asokan scholarship, growth of. x, xi

- Asokan script, lost knowledge of, vii ; romance of its rediscovery, viii-xi ; two kinds of, 102 (see Brāhmī, Kharoṣṭhi)
- Ātman*, in Brahmanism, 66 n.
- Autocracy, limited, in Hindu polity, 47-9
- Avestan affinities to Western dialect of the Edicts, 248
- Ayupālā, 45
- Bairat M.R.E., x, 13-14, 117 n.
- Bakhra, pillar near, 86
- Bālapanḍita, or Samudra, 110 n.
- Banerji-Sastri, Dr. A. P., on damaged cave inscriptions, 206 n.
- Banyan shade trees, 22, 39, 188
- Barabar hill caves described, 89 ; first visited, viii ; granted to Ājivikas, 37, 81, 205, 206 (see Cave Inscriptions I, II, III)
- Barua, Dr. B. M., xi ; new view of Edict chronology, 43 n. ; on position of M.R.E. I., 213 ; other citations, 110 n., 118 n., 147 n., 179 n., 181 n., 188 n., 202 n.
- Beadon, C., xi
- Behaviour, 65, 69, 70-1, 116, 157-8, 163, 192
- Benares, 85, 95 n.
- Besnagar, 97, 98.
- Bhabru or Bairat No. 2 Rock Edict : Annotated translation, 117-19 ; Asoka's address to the Saṃgha, 37, 43, 67, 117, 210 ; Asoka's authority implied, 54, 60, 119 ; canonical texts prescribed by Asoka, 67, 118-19 ; declares faith in Buddhist Trinity, 117 ; discovery of Edict, ix ; location, 14, 117 n. ; text, 217-18
- Bhadrāsāra, 33
- Bhandarkar, Dr. D. R., xi ; (on) Asoka's borrowing from Jainism, 71 n. ; Buddhist influence on Western thought, 77 n. ; chronology, 41 n. ; Minor Rock Edicts, 14 n. ; peoples named in Edicts, 140 n., 168 n. ; Sam-bodhi, 26 n. ; white elephant, 136 n., 137 n.
- Bhandarkar, Sir R. G., cited, 29 n., 202 n.
- M.A.
- Bharhut, stūpas at, 81-2, 88, 152 n.
- Bhattiprolu stūpa, 98
- Bhikkhu*, Buddhist monk, qualifications of, 23
- Bhikkhugatika*, Asoka a, 23
- Bhitā, 88
- Bhitargaon temple, 88-9
- Bhojakagiri, rock, 7
- Bhojas, 21, 29, 168 n.
- Bindusāra, father of Asoka, 2, 3, 9, 13, 44, 64-5 n., 78 n. ; Brahman fed by, 130 n. ; length of reign, 41 ; ministry, 3 n. ; Prime Minister, 3 n., 52 ; Privy Council, 55
- Birds protected, 20, 39, 72, 130, 175, 180, 181, 182
- Bloch, Dr., on the Bharhut relievo, 152 n. ; Bodhi-Tree, 154 n.
- Bodh-Gayā, 15 ; Asokan chaitya (shrine) at, 152 n. ; Asoka's pilgrimage to, 18, 26, 27, 37, 46, 151, 214 ; Burmese inscription at, 105
- Bodhi or Bo-Tree at Gayā, 4-5 ; Asoka visits, 26, 27, 46, 105 ; branch sent to Ceylon, 35-6 ; Tisarakṣitā's jealousy of, 4-5, 46, 105
- Bodhisattva, 25, 61 n. ; in sculpture, 203, 204 n.
- Borderers, unsubdued (frontagers, Anas), 15, 21, 29, 42, 57, 58, 59, 76, 113, 126-7, 131, 140, 166, 167 n.
- Botanical (physic) gardens, 22, 38, 58, 132
- Brahmani geese, 90
- Brahmanical law, Asoka and, 66
- Brahmāvarta, 112 n.
- Brāhmī script, 34 ; original direction reversed, 246 ; parent of Indian scripts, 246 ; source disputed, 146-7
- Brahmins, Brahmans, Brāhmanas, 17, 20, 30, 31, 39, 65, 101, 103, 190, 210 ; fed by Asoka, 20, 130 n. ; not the caste, but ascetics, 141 n. ; punishment of schism by, 199 n.
- Brotherhood, Asoka's faith in, 21, 59
- Brothers of Asoka, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 44, 45, 51, 123, 125 n., 150 n. (see Susīma, Tisya, Vītāsoka)

- Buddha Gautama (Śākyamuni) :
 animal symbols of, 61-2 ;
Dharma of 84,000 sections, 80 ;
 memorials to, 79, 80, 83, 100, 201-4 ; on the next world, 75 ;
 pillar inscription to, 201-4 ;
 predicts Asoka's rule, 4 n. ;
 relics of, 60-1 n., 80-1 n. ; six quarters of, 116-7 n.
- Buddha Koṇākamana (Kanakamuni), 27, 37, 65, 81, 84, 88, 103, 205
- Buddha Krakuchhanda, 84
- Buddhaghosa on Asoka's medical aid, 152 n. ; Asoka's way with schismatics, 64 ; Bhikkhuga- tika, 23 ; ideal monk, 119 n. ; pea-fowl, 62, 131 n. ; shows, 129 n.
- Buddhism : Asoka's spiritual view of, 66-7 ; Asoka's status in, 23-4 ; based on analysis of, causes, 177 n. ; date of Asoka's conversion important, 45 ;
 effects of Asoka's patronage,
 1 ; evangelists (theras), 32-5 ; fundamental tenets, 68 ; holy places, 27, 100 ; image-worship a post-Asokan development, 25 ; influenced Western thought, 77-8 ; popular doctrine, 103 ; proofs of Asoka's faith in, 60-2, 68-9 ; texts used by the theras, 33-4
- Buddhist Church : Asoka temporal head of, 54 ; Asoka's reputed gifts to, 64, 79 ; career for young aristocrats, 104 ; divisions in, 68
- Buddhist canon as selected by Asoka, 67, 118-9
- Buddhist Council, second, 68 ;
 third, 32, 34, 35, 46, 60-1, 63, 68
- Buddhist monasteries ascribed to Asoka, 79
- Buddhist Trinity, 117
- Buddhists, 31, 65, 101 ; slander on, refuted by Asoka, 6-7
- Bühler : editions of the Edicts by, xi ;
 on origin of Brāhmī script, 246
- Bull or ox symbol, 62, 90, 91
- Burma, high literacy in, 102
- Burmese inscription on Asoka, 105
- Burnouf, x
- Burt, Captain T. S., viii, ix
- Cambridge History of India cited, 24 n., 40, 45, 56 n., 80, 166 n., 214 ; quoted, 31, 47, 68, 97-8
- Capital punishment, 66, 179
- Caponing prohibited, 182
- Carlisle, x
- Caste subordinate to religion, 104
- Cave dwellings, 89
- Cave Inscription I. (Nigrodha) :
 Annotated trans., 205 ; grant to
 Ājivikas, 205 ; text, 245
 — — II. (Khalatika Hill) :
 Annotated trans., 206 ; grant to
 Ājivikas, 206 ; text, 245
 — — III. (Khalatika Hill No. 2) : Annotated trans., 207 ; grant as rain shelter, 207 ; text, 245
- Ceremonial, True, 73, 153-6
- Ceremonies, 103 ; useful and useless, 153-6
- Ceylon (Tāmraparṇī, Laṅkā) : ambassadors to, 56, 166 ; Asokan traditions, 2, 20 ; medical missions to, 132 ; mission of Mahendra to, 33, 35-6 ; missions to Asoka from, 35, 36.
- Chañḍāsoka and Dharmāsoka, 4, 5, 17 n., 166 n.
- Chandragupta Maurya, 10, 12 ;
 annual sports, 130 n. ; at work, 144-5 n. ; capital city, 94-5 ;
 defeats Selukos, 13, 15 ; empire, 12-13 ; foreign relations, 96 n., 100 ; legendary abdication and sainthood, 13 ; length of reign, 41 ; love for the chase, 150-1 n. ; milestones, 188 n.
- Chapaḍa, scribe, 117, 246
- Chariot races, 130 n.
- Chariots and horses, 145-6 n.
- Charity, 31, 190, 191, 200-1, 210
- Charlemagne, 1
- Chārumatī, daughter of Asoka, 9, 79
- Chatterji, C. D., cited, 3 n., 7 n., 23 n., 35 n., 62 n., 115 n., 119 n., 125 n., 131 n., 164 n., 181 n.
- Children on sin in Buddhism, 71 n.
- Children, Asoka's love for his, 6,
 121 ; service of parents by, 69, 116, 135 ; subjects regarded as, 48, 121, 127
- Chitaldroog, Mysore, Minor Rock
 Edicts at, 13
- Cholas or Choḍas, 15, 21, 29, 56, 131, 166

- Chronology of Asoka, xi ; from the Edicts, 36-7, 39-41, 214 ; from legends, 9-10, 44-6
 — of the Edicts, 41-3, 208-14
 Chunar quarries, 93
 City Magistrates, 28, 56, 123
 Civil Servants : Prativedakas, 146 ; Purusas, 42, 56-7, 173, 177, 187, 211 ; Yuktas, 57, 127-8 n., 133, 135, 209
 Classes and castes in Asokan society, 103
 Cloister of the vihāra, 194
 Code of Duties (Dharma), 69-71
 Codrington on Indian and Persian bell-capitals, 99
 Coins, 97, 98
 Commemorative Pillar Inscription I. (Rummindei) :
     Annotated trans., 201-4 ; discovery, x ; history, 27, 46 ; locality, 14, 27 ; text, 244
 — — — II. (Nigliṃa) :
     Annotated trans., 205 ; locality, 14, 27, 28 ; text, 245
 Conquest, military, abrogated, 38, 58, 163, 169-70 ; True or Moral (see Dharma-Vijaya)
 Constantine and Christianity, 1
 Contemporaries of Asoka, 29, 32, 40, 41, 56, 104, 166
 Coomaraswamy, Dr. A. K., on Indian " folk art," 97
 Coronation year, Asoka's epochal date, 11, 37, 39-41, 44, 214
 Coryate, Tom, on the Delhi pillar, 92
 Council of Ministers, Privy Council, pariṣat, 55, 56, 57, 135, 147-8
 Court, M. A., viii
 Cow, protected, 21, 182 n., 184
 Cromwell, Oliver, 1, 73
 Cunningham : Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum, x ; discovery at Sankisa, 84 n. ; imitation Asokan pillars, 90 n. ; pre-Asokan pillars, 87 n. ; source of Brāhmī script, 246 ; Stūpa of Bharhut, 61 n. ; Vaiśālī pillar, 86 ; weight of Asokan pillars, 92-3
 Curries, slaughter for, 20, 130
 Darius, cursive script of, 246 ; " thus saith " formula, 108 n.
 M.A.
 Daśaratha, grandson of Asoka, 8, 9, 12, 89
 Dates (see Chronology)
 David of Israel, 1
 Davids, Rhys (quoted), 1, 77 ; on Asoka's treatment of relics, 81 n. ; on " obedience," 137 n.
 Death sentences, days of grace granted, 39, 66, 179
 Deb, H. K., on chronology, 41 n. ; Svastika symbol, 126 n.
 Debts of men and kings, 50
 Deer Park of Buddha, Asoka's visit to, 106
 Deinachos, Greek envoy, 78 n.
 Delhi, pillars removed to, viii, 14, 86, 92, 93
 Delhi-Mirath pillar, first discovered, viii, 1x
 Delhi-Topra pillar, viii ; first to be read, ix ; text used for translation, 172 n.
 Democracy, never perfectly realised, 49
 Deo-Patan, reputed Asokan city, 80
 Dependents, support of, 155 n.
 Destitute, 30, 142
Devānāṃpiya and Piyadasi, royal titles, 11-12, 105 ; supposed degradation of meaning, 105, 108-9
 Devapāla Kṣatriya, a son-in-law of Asoka, 9, 79
 Devī, Asoka's first wife, 8, 9, 44, 46
 Devotion, firm or constant, dr̥ḍha-bhaktitā, 70, 150, 162-3
 Dhammacheti inscription, 105
 Dhammapālā, upādhyāyā, 45
 Dharmā (see Subhadrāṅgi)
Dharma, Aryan religious law : accepted by Asoka, 17 ; Asoka's five applications of, 157-8 n. ; common to all religions, 75-6 ; conquest of, 17, 21, 36, 38, 59, 74, 165-6, 169-70 ; defined, 70, 76 n., 174-5 ; index to, as expounded in the Edicts, 69-70 ; instruction in, 20, 42 ; originality of Asoka's propaganda, 76 n. ; pre-Asokan, 75 n. ; regulation by, 74-5, 172-4, 192, 212 ; summarised, 42, 70-1, 186-93, 212 ; terminology of, 74, 157-8 n.

- Dharma-lipī*, religious Edicts, 40, 74, 185
- Dharma-Mahāmātras* foreshadowed, 43, 127; instituted, 29, 37, 38-9, 40, 56, 74, 139, 188; many functions of, 29-31, 42, 43, 139-44, 190, 194-6, 200 n., 212; of imperial scope, 54; transfer of judicial functions to Rājūkas, 178-9 n.
- Dharmaraksita, or Dhammarak-khita, 33, 34, 104
- Dharma-Vijaya*, moral conquest, 17, 36, 38, 74, 165-6, 169-70
- Dhauī elephant, 61
- Dhauī R.E. (see Kalinga Rock Edict I)
- Dialects of the Edicts, 247-50; grammar in common, 250-5
- Didarganj, 97
- Diodotus of Bactria, 40; coin of, 98
- Dionysios, Greek envoy, 78 n.
- Dīpavamsa* cited, 2, 12, 33
- District Officers or divisional commissioners, Prādesīkas, 28, 53, 56, 57, 134
- Divyāvadāna* cited, 3, 6, 8, 9, 51, 64 n., 65 n.; Asoka as builder, 79; Asoka's Buddhism, 110 n.; Asoka's last days, 37 n.; chronology, 44-6; illustrated in stone at Sānchī, 105-6
- Domestic measures, P.E. VII as a résumé of, 41, 186-93, 212
- Domestic or family life, 70, 103
- Dundubhissara (Dadabhisāra), 33, 35
- Dutt, Sukumar, cited, 199 n.
- Edicts, Asoka's: a unique personal record, 2; chronology of, 208-14; date events from coronation, 11; dates of publication, 36, 37, 214; epilogue to, R.E. XIV, 171-2; exaggerations in, 20, 130, 162; express the King's orders, 55; few imperfections in, 50-1; genesis and purpose, 18-19, 144, 149, 187-8; geographical distribution, 13-14, 51; grammar outlined, 250-5; home life in, 103; imperfections apologised for, 16, 50, 171-2; indicate policy, principles and laws, 54, 186-7; Moral Law (Dharma) of, 69-71; peoples and places named in, 15-16; permanency assured, 19, 55, 87, 113 n., 193; recitation of, 54, 128; refer to Asoka by title, 12; relatives mentioned in, 5-6; scripts of, 246-7; style of, 1; Upaniṣads echoed in, 66 n., 116 n.; written in vernacular dialects, 102, 247-50
- Edmunds, A. J., 118 n.
- Ekbatana, 95
- Elders, seniors, behaviour to, 20, 69, 137, 152, 163
- Elephant forest, 58, 184
- Elephant symbol, 61-2, 90, 91, 99, 106, 170 n., 204 n.
- Elliot, Sir Walter, ix
- Ellis, Colonel, x
- Emperor's mission, 22
- Empire of Asoka, extent of, 13-16, 50, 144, 171; pacifist after Kalinga war, 20-1, 22, 126-7, 163, 164-6
- Equality of States, modern doctrine anticipated by Asoka, 21, 126-7, 165
- Essenes, 77 n.
- European Great War, 20
- Evil, apunya, 71, 103
- Fa-hien cited: Asoka and his brother, 6; Asoka's gift to the Church, 64; Asoka's "hell," 4 n.; Bo-Tree legend, 5; Buddhist car procession, 25; Dharmavivardhana, 8, 51; inscriptions misread, vii-viii; legend of the 84,000 topes, 80-1; six pillars of Asoka, 83
- Fang-chih*, 85, 204 n.
- Feminine morals, 31, 39
- Firoz Shah removes pillars to Delhi, 14, 86, 93, 199 n.
- Fish, protected, 21-2, 72, 175, 181, 183
- Fleet, xi, 33 n., 81 n., 94 n.
- Follet, M. P., on group life, 49
- Foreign missions, Asoka's, 29, 31-2, 35-6, 38, 56, 59, 165-9; messengers of peace, goodwill and social service, 77; names and destinations of missionaries, 32-4; relics and inscriptions at Sānchī, 34-5

- Foreign Office, 77, 100
 Forest folks, 57, 58, 59, 76; civilisation enjoined on, 165
 Forgiveness of enemies, 20-1, 165
 Forrest, x
 Foucher: Beginnings of Buddhist Art, 61 n., 91 n.; on sculpture at Sāncī, 26, 105
 Franke, O., xi
 Freedom of unsubdued peoples conditional on morality, 21, 58, 59, 127, 165
 Friends, behaviour to, 69, 135, 158; five ways of serving, 135 n.
 Frontier administration, 57-8, 126-8, 173-4 n.
 Fuhrer, x
 Game forest, 146 n.
 Gandhāra, 8, 32, 34, 51
 Gandhāras, 15, 29, 30, 140
 Ganges, 55 n., 105
 Garuḍa symbol, 90, 91 n.
 Gedrosia, 12, 15
 Gentleness, mildness, mārdavam, 70, 165 n., 170, 191
 Gift, the True, 72, 73, 156 n., 157-8
 Giridatta Thera, 7
 Girnar, capital of Surāṣṭra, 14 n., 51
 Girnar Rock Edict, viii, ix, 13, 14 n., 61; defaced lines under, 170 n.; dialect, 247
 Glory, True, 74, 156
 Gnostic sects and Buddhism, 77
 Gods, "popularising" the, 24, 37, 110-12
 Gold workings, ancient, 107-8 n.
 Goltz on fighting strength of a nation, 162 n.
 Good deeds, 71, 139, 175, 191
 Gotiputa, 35
 Government by Dharma, 74-5, 172-4
 Governors compared to nurses, 48-9, 53, 178; independent jurisdiction of, 39, 176-7; neglectful, admonished, 53-4, 121-2
 Grammar of the Edicts, 250-5
 Gratitude, kṛitajñatā, 70, 150
 Great Ministers, Mahāmātras, 28
 Greater India, spiritual foundation of, 104
 Greek elements, supposed, in Indian art, 98
 Greeks, Asoka's relations with, 77, 78 n., 100, 169 n. (and see Yavanas)
 Group life increasing, 49; under ancient Hindu monarchy, 49-50
 Gupta of Benares, 27
 Happiness, Asoka's formula for, 70-1; of a King, 148-9 n.
 Hārītiṭputa, 35
 Harmony of religions, 111 n.
 Harrington, J. H., viii
 Havell on Persian and Mauryan palace design, 96; on the lotus, 90, 99
 Heads of Departments, Mukhas, 56, 190
 Heaven, svarga, objective of Asoka's life, 75, 103, 156, 158, 169; popular presentment of, 137 n. (see Other world)
 Heber, Bishop, on the Delhi pillar, 92
 Heliiodorus, 104
 "Hell," Asoka's, 4, 86
 Hellenistic contemporaries, five, 29, 32, 40, 41, 56, 104, 166
 Heretics or dissenters, pāṣaṇḍas, 101, 163
 Hill caves, viii (see Barabar, Nagar-juni, Cave dwellings)
 Himalaya country, 33, 93
 Hindu Greeks, 104
 Hoare, Captain James, viii
 Hodges, viii
 Home or family life, 70, 103
 Horse symbol, 62, 85, 90, 91, 202 n.
 Horticulturists, 58
 Hospitals and medical treatment, 22, 38
 Householders, grihasthas, 103, 141, 190, 210; virtues of, 103, 163-4
 Hultzsch, xi, 60; authority on Asokan grammar, 251 n.; on priority of Minor Edict I, 212, 213; on the defacer of the word "Ajivikehi," 206 n.; other citations, 111 n., 114, 116 n., 118 n., 126 n., 123 n., 140 n., 142 n., 143 n., 144 n., 150 n., 153 n., 155 n., 157 n., 160 n., 163 n., 165 n., 168 n., 171 n., 172 n., 173 n., 174 n., 175 n., 176 n., 178 n., 179 n.

- 180 n., 181 n., 185 n., 186 n., 187 n., 188 n., 189 n., 191 n., 193 n., 195 n., 196 n., 199 n., 201 n., 205 n., 218 n., 235 n., 245 n.
- Hunting abolished, 20, 26, 38, 150-2
- Images carried in procession, 25 ;
Mauryan trade in, 25
- Imitation Asokan pillars, 90 n.
- Immortality, Asoka's belief in, 75, 158
- Imperial government, 50-3, 54-5
- India, divisions of, 140-1 n.
- Indian Museum, 81-2
- Indo-Aryan traditions common to India and Persia, 96 n., 100
- Indraji, Dr. B. L., x
- Injustice, remedying, 30 n., 43, 121-2, 142-3, 209
- Inscriptions, Asokan, romance of, vii-xi ; well-cut letters of, 98 (see Edicts, etc.)
- Inscriptions commemorating Asoka, 105
- Inscriptions, undiscovered, 14 n.
- Inspection, tours of, 16, 20, 50, 55, 152
- Intelligence Officers, Prativedakas, 146
- Internationalism, advanced, of Asoka, 58-9
- Isila, 13, 16, 52, 108
- Isipatana (Sarnath), 27
- I-tsing cited: image of Asoka as monk, 64 n. ; monastery guests, 23 n. ; prophecy of Buddha, 4 n.
- Jackson, V.H., inscriptions found by, 205-6 n.
- Jail deliveries on coronation day, 39, 66, 184-5
- Jainism, Asoka and, 60, 71 n. ; Chandragupta and, 13 ; founder of, 86 ; works on, 71 n.
- Jains (see Nirgranthas)
- Jalauka, a son of Asoka, 8, 9
- Jambudvīpa, Asoka's country, 4 n., 105 ; legendary gift of, 64 ; propaganda in, 24, 110 ; spirituality of, 112 n.
- Janasāna, Ājīvika saint, 3, 64-5 n.
- Jaugada R.E. (see Kalinga Rock Edict II)
- Jayaswal, K. P., cited xi, 135 n., 138 n., 147 n., 153 n., 167 n., 168 n., 176 n., 177 n. ; compares Edicts with Smritis, 143 n. ; estimates population of Kalinga, 162 n.
- Jeweller's art, 97-8
- Job quoted, 2
- Jones, Sir William, viii
- Judicial reforms, 39
- Kabiruddin, Shah, ix
- Kalhana on Asoka's building, 79
- Kalinga : Asoka's only conquest, 16 ; date, 37, 214 ; Edicts special to the locality, 13, 126 n., 210, 214 ; estimate of war losses, 16-17, 162-5 ; fighting strength, 162 n. ; pre-conquest followers of Dharma, 75 n., 163 ; primitive condition, 28-9, 104-5 ; reactions of conquest, 17, 18, 19-20, 76 n., 162-5, 213, 214 ; reassurances, 48, 165
- Kalinga Rock Edict I (Dhauili) :
Annotated trans., 120-6 ; children, 6, 121 ; City Magistrates, 56, 123 ; dialect, 247 ; discovery, ix ; Governors exhortated, 53-4, 122-3 ; judicial inspectors foreshadowed, 123-4, 208-9 ; King's orders, 55, 122 ; locality, 13, 14 n. ; next world, 75, 121 ; official tours, 28, 57, 123-6 ; outlying towns, 15, 16, 123, 125 ; Princely Viceroy, 6, 51, 123 ; rectifying injustice, 30 n., 43, 121-2 ; text, 218-20 ; Viceroy's Ministers, 52, 124, 125-6
- Kalinga Rock Edict II (Jaugada) :
Annotated trans., 126-8 ; Dharma-Mahāmāitras foreshadowed, 28, 43, 127, 208 ; dialect, 247 ; equality of states, 21, 126-7 ; first copied, ix-x ; locality, 13, 14 n. ; paternal government, 48, 127 ; Provincial Governors, 52, 126 ; recitation of Edict, 54, 128 ; text, 220-2 ; Tīṣya day, 54, 128 ; unsubdued borderers, 58, 126-7, 211 ; Viceroy's officers, 52, 127

- Kalsi Rock Inscription: dialect, 247; discovered, x; locality, 13; elephant symbol, 61, 170 n. (see Rock Edicts IX and X)
- Kambojas, 15, 20, 29, 30, 140, 168
- Kāñchipura (? Satiyaputra), 15
- Kānta, Pandit Kamalā, ix
- Kapilavāstu, 27; pillars near, 84
- Kapis (Kafiristan), 15
- Karma*, 103
- Kāruvāki, second Queen of Asoka, 8, 9, 144 n.; Edict of, 200-1
- Kashmir, 15, 32, 34; traditionally given to the Church, 79; vihāras in, 79, 82
- Kashmir Chronicle* cited, 8, 9
- Kassapagotta (Kotiputta), 33, 34, 35
- Kathāvatthu* treatise, 61
- Katra, 88
- Kauśāmbī (Kosam), 52, 86; pillar at, 93 (see Minor Pillar Edict II)
- Keralaputra (Malabar), 15, 21, 132
- Kautiliya references: Arthaśāstra compared with Edicts, xi, 107 n., 108 n.; cattle enclosure, 145 n.; conqueror's duty, 161 n.; conquerors, three classes of, 165-6 n.; drinking bouts, 130 n.; elephant officer, 58; free imports, 132 n.; frontagers, 131 n.; frontier officers, 57; game forest, 146 n.; government servants, 124 n., 125 n., 127 n., 133 n., 134 n.; guardian of trade routes and live stock, 160-1 n.; hunting, 151 n.; jail deliveries, 185 n.; king and his council, 148 n.; — as father, 121 n.; king's activity, 148-9; — cabinet, 55; — duties, 146 n., 148; — orders, 55, 108 n.; Mahāmātras, 107 n., 120 n., 127 n., 143 n., 173 n.; overseers or inspectors, 146-7 n.; protected creatures, 182 n.; public finance, 136 n.; public works, 189 n.; ransom, 180 n.; royal formula, 108 n.; royal harems, 191 n.; secret agents, 57; secretariats, 56 n.; segregation of sects, 149 n.; slaves and hirelings, 154-5 n.; State's duty to poor and afflicted, 121 n., 142 n.; Tāmraparnī, 132 n.; tax-gatherer, 147 n.; treatment of prisoners, 121 n.; 123 n., 143 n.; Western India (Aparānta), 141 n.
- Kern's Manual of Indian Buddhism, 68
- Kesariya, stūpa at, 83
- Khalatika Hill (Barabar Hill), 205 n. (see Cave Inscriptions II, III)
- Khallāṭaka, Prime Minister, 3 n., 52
- Khāravēla of Kalinga, 11, 206 n.
- Kharoṣṭhī or Kharoṣṭrī script, ix, 117 n.; Semitic in origin, 246
- Kindness, dayā, 70, 72, 175, 191
- King's care for all, 72, 185-6
- King's duties, 16, 50, 144-9; relative urgency of, 148 n.
- King's highest work, preaching Dharma, 72, 73, 137-8, 148, 152, 163; — orders, generally in writing, 55, 147 n., 148 n.; — sons, status of, 9, 191
- Kingship, Indian conception of, 47, 48; of Asoka, democratic, 49
- Kittoe, Captain, at Dhauli, ix
- Kodīniputa, 35
- Kosāmbī, 15 (see Kauśāmbī)
- Kosikiputa, 35
- Kumarādevi's tribute to Asoka, 105
- Kumāras* and dālakas, 9
- Kuṇāla (Dharmavivardhana), son of Padmāvatī, 8, 9, 45; Vice-roy at Taxila, 46, 51, 52, 125 n.
- Kuśinagara or Kusinārā, 27; pillars at, 85; relics at, 60 n.
- Lāghulovāda*, 67, 119
- Land revenue, 204
- Lang, Captain, ix
- Language of the Edicts: Eastern and Western dialects compared, 247-50; grammar in common, 250-5; original and translation, 248
- Lapidary art, 97, 98
- Lassen, identifies Greek kings, 166 n.
- Lauriya Ararāj pillar and Edict, ix, 14, 27, 86

- Lauriya Nandangarh pillar and Edict, ix, 14, 27-8, 86
- Law, a natural growth from group life, 48; sources of, 47-8
- Law, N., cited, 184 n.
- Laws, Asoka's, indicated by the Edicts, 54
- Lay-worshippers, upāsakas, 194, 196 n.
- Leigh, Captain, x
- Levi, Sylvain, on Deo-Patan, 80; on Kharoṣṭrī script, 246
- Liberality, 65, 69, 70, 135; the highest, 156 n.
- Life, as valued by Asoka, 66, 116, 211; boon or gift of, 39, 72, 175
- Lion symbol, 62, 83, 84, 90, 91
- Literacy, high in Asoka's time, 102-3
- Lotus and honeysuckle abacus, 91; capital, 90, 99; symbol, 204 n.
- Louis, king and saint, 2
- Love through moral conquest, 169
- Lüders, xi; cited, 122 n., 165 n., 176 n., 178 n., 179 n., 189 n.
- Lumbini Garden or Grove (Rummindei), 27, 37, 46, 85, 203 n.
- Lummini village (see Rummindei)
- Magadha, Bihar, Asoka as king of, 117; intercourse with Ceylon, 36
- Māgadhi, Asokan court language, 247-8; grammar of, 250-5
- Magas of Cyrene, 29, 40, 56, 166
- Mahābhārata* cited: fire of destruction, 138 n.; king as mother, 121 n.; samāja as Śaiva festival, 129 n.
- Mahābodhivamsa* cited, 3, 8
- Mahādeva, 33, 34, 45
- Mahādharmaraksita, Yonaka preacher, 7, 33, 34, 45
- Mahāmātra*, status of, in the Edicts and Kauṭīliya, 107
- Mahāmātras*, ministers, classes of, 52-3, 56, 120; duties of, 123-6, 127, 147; Edict references to, as guide to chronology, 208-10
- Mahāmāyā, Buddhist Madonna, 202 n., 203, 204 n.
- Mahāraksita or Mahārakkhita, 32, 34
- Mahārāstra, 33
- Mahāvamsa*: Asokan legends, 3, 4, 7, 41, 110 n., 130 n.; chronology of, 9-10, 40-1, 44-6; credits Asoka's missions to Buddhist Church, 32, 34 n.; legend of the 84,000 vihāras, 80
- Mahāvamsatthā* cited, 3, 64 n.
- Mahāvānaya, 35
- Mahāyāna Buddhism, 25
- Mahendra, son of Devī, 8, 9, 10, 44; appointed Viceregent, 45, 51; head of Samgha, 45; mission to Ceylon, 33, 35-6; ordained, 45, 104, 110 n.; sails from Pāṭaliputra, 95 n.; visits mother, 46
- Mahimsakamaṇḍala, 34
- Mahisamaṇḍala, 33
- Majjhantika, 32, 34, 54
- Majjhima, missionary, 33, 35
- Mango gardens or groves, 22, 39, 58, 188, 200
- Mansehra Rock Edicts, x, 13, 14 n.; dialect, 247 (see Rock Edict V)
- Manu, defines Brahmāvarta, 112 n.; on sacred law, 47-8; on Yuktas, 127 n.
- Marcus Aurelius, 1
- Marshall, Sir John: Guide to Sanchi, 35 n., 106; on Asokan sculptures, 91
- Maski Minor Rock Edict, xi, 14, 60; only one to name Asoka, 12, 108 n.
- Masson, C., ix
- Mathurā, 88; statues near, 97, 98
- Maudgalāyana, 27
- Mauneya-sūte*, 67, 118
- Mauryan bricks, 88-9
- Mauryan engineering: irrigation, 93-4; town-planning, 94-5; transport of Asokan pillars, 92-3
- Mauryan minor arts, 97-8; polished stone, 89, 91-2, 96, 97; wood-work, 97
- Mauryas or Moriyas, clan of, 3; Mayūra ensign of, 92
- Measures of distance, 83 n., 188 n.
- Meat diet, Asoka and, 20, 38, 62
- Medical aid, 32, 38, 58, 131-2
- Medicinal plants, 22, 30, 38, 58, 132
- Meerut pillar and Edict, 14, 86
- Meditation (see Reflection)

Megasthenes, ambassador at Pāṭali-putra, 78 n., 100; (on) ascetics, 142 n.; Chandragupta's park, 146 n.; describes the capital, 94-5; (on) Indian Foreign Office, 77, 100; irrigation officers, 94, 133 n.; Kalinga, 16; King at the chase, 150-1 n.; overseers and inspectors, 146 n.; royal elephants, 58; waterside wooden cities, 95

Merry-makings, samājas, Asoka and, 20, 38, 62, 129-30

Michelson, xi; cited, 119 n., 145 n., 173 n., 174 n., 175 n., 178 n., 189 n.; on Sanskrit, 248, 249

Middle-Indic (Prakrit) dialects, 248, 249

Milinda Pañha on Asoka, 105

Minor Pillar Edict I (Sarnath):

Addressed to Mahāmātras, 210-11; annotated trans., 193-8; date, 43; discovery, x; King's order against schism, 54, 60, 64, 68 n., 193-4; locality, 14, 87, 93; publishing the King's order, 194-6; text, 243

— — — II Kausāmbī:

Addressed to Mahāmātras, 52, 210-11; annotated trans., 199; in Cunningham's Corpus x; King's order against schism, 54-5, 60, 64, 199; locality, 14, 86, 93; text, 243

— — — III (Sānchi):

Addressed to Mahāmātras, 210-11; annotated trans., 200; date, 43; in Cunningham's Corpus, x; King's order against schism, 55, 60, 64, 200; locality, 14, 86-7, 93; text, 244

— — — IV. (Queen's Edict):

Annotated trans., 200-1; locality, 144 n., 199 n.; relatives, 5, 200-1; royal charities, 31, 200-1; text, 244

Minor Rock Edict I (Brahmagiri):

Annotated trans., 107-15; Antas, frontagers, 42, 113, 211; Asoka's Buddhism, 18, 60, 108-9, 213, 214; date, 214; first of the Edicts, 18, 19, 212-3; Isila, 52, 108; locality, 13; Ministers of the Viceroy,

Mahāmātras, 52, 56-7, 107; permanency of the message, 19, 87, 113 n.; popularising the gods, 24, 37, 110-12; preamble to King's orders, 55, 108; Prince (Viceroy, Asoka's brother) at Suvarṇagiri, 6, 51, 107; self-exertion, 73, 109, 113; text, 215-6

— — — II (Mysore):

Annotated trans., 116-7; King's orders, 55, 116; relatives, 5, 116; respect for life, 116, 211; scribe, 57, 117; text, 217

Minor Rock Edicts: earlier than Rock Edicts, 43; localities of, 13-14, 113 n.

Mitra, S. N., 118 n.

Moderation, or Middle Path, 70, 122, 135

Moggaliputta Tissa (see Upagupta)

Monasteries and education, 101-2

Monasteries (vihāras) attributed to Asoka, 80, 81; noted by Yuan Chwang, 79, 82

Monk, was Asoka a? 23-4, 45, 63-4, 109

Monks and nuns, heretical, how punished, 193-4, 197, 198 n., 199, 200

Mookerji, R. K., cited, 48, 112 n., 138 n., 196 n., 199 n.

Moral Law (Dharma) of the Edicts, 68-71, 72-7; personally lived by Asoka, 71-2

Moral Welfare Department, 29-31

Morality, the condition of freedom, 58-9

Moriyas (see Mauryas)

Morris, 181 n.

Mudrā-rākṣasa, 12

Mukharji, P. C., on excavations at Pāṭaliputra, 96; Nativity sculpture at Rummindei, 202-3 n.; Rummindei Pillar, 85

Mūlakadeva, 33

Munigāthā, 67, 118

Mysore, Minor Rock Edicts at, x; peculiarities of dialect, 247; scribe's signature, 117, 246

Nābhapantis, or Nabhakas, 21, 29, 168

Nabhitis, 168

Nagar (Jalalabad), 15

- Nagarjuni hill caves described, 89, 205 n.; first visited, viii; granted to Ājīvika, 89, 206 n.; inscriptions of Daśaratha, 12, 89, 206 n., 207 n.
- Nāgas, Nāgīs, symbolic figures, 106
- Nandas, empire of the, 13
- Nativity sculpture at Rummindei, 202-4 n.; other examples, 204 n.
- Nepal, 15, 27, 28, 80, 93
- Nigali Sagar Pillar Edict, x
- Nigliva, pillar at, 14, 27, 28, 84, 87 (see Commemorative Pillar Inscription II)
- Nigrodha, nephew of Asoka, 18 n., 41, 44, 62-3, 110 n.
- Nigrodha Cave, 205, 245
- Nirgranthas (Jains), 7, 31, 65, 190, 210
- Nirvāṇa, not taught by Asoka, 68
- Non-Violence, ahimsā, 17, 20, 69-70, 137, 155, 158, 211; implied, 43, 128-9, 135
- Numerals, 252
- Obedience, 69, 71, 137 n.
- Objectionable shows (samāja), 20, 38
- Oertel, x
- Official tours of Yuktas, Rājūkas and Prādetikas, 28, 38, 57, 123-6, 133-5
- Ojha's Hindi edition of the Edicts, 138-9 n.
- Old and infirm, 30, 39, 69, 142, 143, 192
- Omar, Khalif, 1
- Other world, happiness in, through Dharma, 75, 121, 149, 156, 169, 170, 172, 180, 193
- Outlawry of war first proclaimed by Asoka, 21, 58
- Ox symbol, 83, 84, 90
- Padmāvati, third or fourth wife of Asoka, 8, 9, 45
- Palidas, 169
- Pāṇdyas, 15, 21, 29, 56, 131, 166
- Parents, service to, 69, 116, 135
- Parks, 58, 146
- Parvan days, Brahmanical Sabbath, 183 n.
- Pastures or ranch, vraja, 58, 145, 160; officer in charge of, 58, 160
- Pāṭaliputra, Asoka's capital, 15, 28, 29, 89, 90, 105, 193, 210; Buddhist Council at, 32, 68; contested throne of, 3-4; described by Megasthenes, 94-5; family associations of, 5; founded by Udaya, 94; improved by Asoka, 95-6; missions to, from Ceylon, 35, 36; monastery at, 80; palace and grounds, 95, 146 n.; pilgrims' road, 27-8, 83 n., 93, 100; processions, 25; prohibitions at, 20, 38; prophecies on, 94, 97 n.; site excavated—marks of flood and fire, 96-7; Tisya at, 6, 7; tope and pillar at, 64, 86
- Patañjali on Mauryan trade in images of gods, 25
- Patna, 97, 98
- Peace basis of Asoka's empire—21, 22, 58-9
- Peacock as food of kings, 52, 130-1 n.; restricted slaughter of, 20, 38, 62, 130, 182 n., 211
- Peacock device of the Mauryas, 92, 106
- Persian and Indian art: palaces of like design, 96; pillar details, 98, 99; suggested common origin, 96 n., 100
- Persian and Indian inscription formulae, 108 n.
- Pew, Major P. L., ix
- Pilgrimage, an institution in India, 22; Asoka's, with Upagupta, 27, 46, 61, 63, 151-2 n., 201 n., 203 n.
- Pillar Edict I:
- Annotated trans., 172-4; Anta-Mahāmātras, 42, 56, 173, 211; date, 36, 172; next world, 75, 172; Puruṣas, Civil Servants, 42, 56, 173, 211; regulation by Dharma, 74-5, 172-4; self-examination, 73-4, 173; text, 236-7
- II:
- Annotated trans., 174-5; boon or 'gift of life, 39, 72, 175; good deeds, 72, 175; spiritual insight, 72, 175; text, 237
- III:
- Annotated trans., 175-6; self-examination, 73-4, 175-6; sin, 175; text, 237

Pillar Edict IV :

Annotated trans., 176-80; date, 36, 176; Governors likened to nurses, 48-9, 53, 178; independence of Governors, 39, 176-7; other world, 75, 180; Puruṣas, 42, 56-7, 177, 211; Rājūkas, 42, 53, 176-80, 211; respite to death-sentenced persons, 39, 66, 179; text, 238

— — V :

Annotated trans., 180-5; date, 36, 180, 184-5; elephant forests, 58, 184; fish preserves, 21-2, 184; jail deliveries, 39, 66, 184-5; protection of animals, 39, 43, 62, 180-4, 211; Punarvasu day, 184; text, 239; Uposatha days, 61, 183-4

— — VI :

Annotated trans., 185-6; changed life through Dharma ordained, 20, 185; date, 36, 40, 186; King honours all sects, 65, 185; not relatives only, but all others cared for, 72, 185; purpose of Rock Edicts, 18, 19, 185; text, 240

— — VII :

Annotated trans., 186-93; ascetics, 103, 190, 192; chronological position, 211-12; date, 36, 41, 193; Dharma-Mahāmātras, 188, 190, 210, 212; Dharma propaganda summarised, 42, 186-93; harems, 6, 190-1; householders, 103, 190; indulgences and charity, 31, 190, 191; Mahāmātras, 190, 212; Mukhās, Departmental Heads, 56, 190; other world, 75, 193; permanency of the message, 87, 193, 213; proper behaviour, 192; publishing pious precepts, 186-7; Puruṣas, 42, 56, 187, 211; Rājūkas, 187, 212; reflection, 74, 192-3, 212; relatives, 5, 190, 193; résumé of domestic measures, 41, 186-93, 212; Samgha, 61, 67, 190; servants and hirelings, 103, 192; sons, status of, 9, 191; text, 240-2; works of public utility, 22, 30, 39, 42, 58, 188-91, 212

Pillar Edicts : Asoka's account of, 18-19; date of issue, 36, 37, 172 n.; dialects, 247, 248; earlier measures, 39; later than Rock Edicts, 41-3, 211-12; " Pillars of piety," 187-8; symbolic animal capitals, 61-2, 90-1

Pillars ascribed to Asoka : Allaha-bad, 86; Delhi-Topra, 86, 92; Kapilavastu, 84, 90; Koluha, 86, 90, 92; Kusinārā (two), 85; Lauriya-Ararāj, 86, 90; Lauriya-Nandangarh, 86, 90, 92; Mahāsāla, 85-6, 90; Meerut, 86; Niglīva, 84, 87, 100; Pāṭaliputra (two), 83, 86, 90; Rājagriha, 86, 90; Rampurwa, 86, 88, 90, 92; Rummindēi (Lumbini), 85, 87, 90, 100; Sānchī, 86-7, 90, 100; Sāṅkāśya (Sankassa), 83-4, 90; Sankisa, 84 n.; Sarnath road (two), 85, 87, 90, 90, 100; Śrāvastī (two), 83, 84, 90; Vaiśālī-Kuśinagara road, 83

Pillars, Asokan : design, dimensions, quality and symbolism, 89-92, 96, 98; foreign inspiration supposed, 96 n., 98; Indian originality vindicated, 99-100; later imitations, 90-1 n.; uninscribed, 86 n.; utilised by Guptas, 87-8 n.

Pillars, pre-Asokan, 86 n., 87-8, 95, 96

Piṅgalavatsa, 3 n., 65 n.

Pioneers in Asokan research, vii-xi

" Pious tours " of the King, 18, 29, 26-8, 39, 46, 61, 63, 151; of Viceroy and Governors, 28-9, 123-6, 133-6

Piprahwa stūpa, 98

Piṭakas, 7, 107 n.

Pitkinaks, 21, 29, 30, 140, 168

Pleasure in morality, Dharma-rati, 70, 170

Police, under the Prādeśika, 134 n.

Polier, Captain, viii

Polygamy and early marriage, 104

Poor and miserable, 69, 192

Poverty, absolute, not advocated by Asoka, 157 n.

Praśnavyākaraṇa Sūtra, cited, 71 n., 181 n.

- Preamble to King's orders, 55, 108, 116, 122, 133
- Prinsep, James, first reader of Asokan script, viii, ix, x
- Private secretaries, 55
- Processions and shows, 24-5
- Proper treatment, 69, 157-8, 163, 192
- Provincial government, 51-4, 55-8
- Provincial Governors, Rājūkas, Prādefikas, 42-3, 52, 53, 57, 126, 133, 134, 176-8, 179, 187, 209; admonishment of, 53-4, 122-3; independent jurisdiction of, 39, 176-7
- Ptolemy, geographer, cited, 131 n.
- Ptolemy Philadelphos of Egypt, 29, 56, 78 n., 166
- Public amusements, samāja, interdicted, 20, 38, 129-30
- Public religion of Asoka, 68; Moral Law, practical and doctrinal, 69-71, 72-7; not Buddhism, 68
- Public works: an imperial concern, 54; care of, 58; described 22, 30, 42; pre-Edict, 38, 39; résumé of, 188-9
- Pulindas, 21, 29, 169 n.
- Punarvasu* day, 184
- Punyavardhana, 15
- Purāṇas* cited, 41, 140 n.
- Purity, saucham, 70, 175, 191; of heart, bhāva-suddhi, 70, 150
- Pusyagupta, 51, 94
- Queen's Edict (see Minor Pillar Edict IV)
- Quinquennial tours, 28, 38, 53, 57, 123, 133-5
- Rādhagupta, Asoka's Minister, 3, 52
- Rain shelters, caves granted for, 207
- Rājagriha, pillar at, 86; samāja at, 129 n.
- Rājūkas*, Provincial Governors, Asoka's appeal to, 53-4, 122-3; status and powers of, 53, 56, 57, 176-80, 209
- Rakṣita or Rakkhita, 33, 34
- Rāmagrāma, stūpa at, 82 n.; visited by Asoka, 106
- Rampurwa Pillar Edict, x, 14, 28; pillars at, 86, 88
- Rāṣṭrikas, 29, 30, 140
- Ravenshaw, E. L., ix
- Reflection, 74, 179, 192-3
- Relatives, Asoka's affection for, indicated in Edicts, 5, 6, 116, 135, 136, 137, 143-4, 158, 163, 190-1, 200-1; proper treatment of, 69, 116, 137, 163
- Relic caskets, 98
- Relics of Buddha, 60-1 n., 80-1 n.; of missionaries, 34-5, 36
- Religions, Dharma the essence of all, 75-6, 159-61
- Religious catholicity of Hindus, 104
- Religious change of life ordained, 20, 185
- Religious conferences, 39, 65, 101-2
- Religious publicity, 18-19, 25-6, 185, 186-7, 212
- Religious shows and processions, 24-5, 39, 136-7
- Religious symbols, 99
- Respect, 69, 116
- Rest-houses, 22, 39, 58, 188
- Restraint of passions, 150, 165; of speech, 73; of violence, 70, 155
- Rhinoceroses, 181
- Rice, Lewis, x, 33 n.
- Riṣṭriya, 33
- Rock Edict I (Shāhbāzgarhi):
- Annotated trans., 128-30; blood sacrifices abolished, 20, 61, 128-9, 130, 211; dialect, 247, 248; merry-makings, samāja, forbidden, 20, 38, 62, 129-30; non-violence implied, 43, 128-9; royal table, 20, 130; text, 222
- II (Girnar):
- Annotated trans., 131-2; Antas, frontagers, 29, 42, 131, 211; dialect, 247, 248; medicinal plants, herbs, roots and fruits imported and planted, 22, 30, 132; medical aid for man and beast at home and abroad, 32, 38, 58, 131-2; roadside wells and trees, 30, 38, 42, 58, 132; Tāmraparṇī or Ceylon, 36, 132; text, 223; welfare work, 41, 131-2, 211
- III (Girnar):
- Annotated trans., 133-6; dialect, 247, 248; liberality, 65, 135; moderation, 135; non-violence implied, 43, 135, 211; official tours, 28, 38, 57, 133-5, 208,

209; Prāṇesika, 53, 134; preamble, 55, 133; Rājūka, 43, 57, 133, 211; relatives, 5, 135; text, 223-4; Yuktas, 57, 133, 135

Rock Edict IV (Girnar) :

Annotated trans., 136-8; dialect, 247, 248; King's highest work — preaching Dharma, 72, 73, 137-8; non-violence, 43, 137, 211; obedience, 69, 137; relatives, 5, 136, 137; religious shows and processions, 39, 136-7; text, 224-5; unseemly behaviour to ascetics condemned, 65, 136; war-drum silenced, 21, 38, 58, 136

— — V (Mānsehrā) :

Annotated trans., 139-44; ascetics, Brahmanical, 103, 141; borderers, western, 15, 41, 140, 211; destitute and infirm, 142; Dharma-Mahāmātras, 29, 30, 38-9, 42, 43, 56, 139-44, 209, 211; dialect, 247, 248; "here," meaning Pāṭaliputra, 15, 143; householders, 103, 141; purpose of Edicts, 19, 144; rectifying injustice, 30 n., 43, 142-3, 209; relatives, 5, 6, 143-4; soldiers, 103, 141; supervision of women, 43, 143-4, 210; text, 225-6

— — VI (Girnar) :

Annotated trans., 144-9; dialect, 247, 248; kingly duties, 16, 50, 144-8; King's highest duty, 72, 148; Mahāmātras, 56, 147; parks, 58, 146; pastures or ranch, 58, 145; purpose of Edict, 149; text, 227-8

— VII (Shāhbāzgarhi) :

Annotated trans., 149-50; dialect, 247, 248; sects not to be segregated, 65, 149; text, 228

— VIII (Shāhbāzgarhi) :

Annotated trans., 150-3; Bodhi-Gayā, 15, 37, 151, 214; dialect, 247, 248; inspection, visits of, 16, 20, 50, 152; King's moral teaching, 72, 152; King's title, 12, 151, 153; "pious tours," 18, 20, 151; pleasure trips and hunting, past, 20, 26, 38, 150-1; text, 228-9; visits and gifts to ascetics and elders, 20, 65, 152

Rock Edict IX (Kalsi) :

Annotated trans., 153-6; ascetics, liberality to, 65, 155; ceremonies — true ceremonial, 60, 73, 103, 153-6; dialect, 247, 248; next world, 75, 150; non-violence, 43, 155, 211; slaves and employees, 103, 154; text and variant, 229-30

— — X (Kalsi) :

Annotated trans., 150-7; dialect, 247, 248; glory, 74, 150; King's effort for the hereafter, 75, 156; self-exertion, 73, 156-7; text, 231

— — XI (Shāhbāzgarhi) :

Annotated trans., 157-8; ascetics, 103, 158; Dharma, the supreme gift, 72, 73, 157-8; dialect, 247, 248; non-violence, 43, 158, 211; relatives and friends, 5, 158; slaves and servants, 103, 158; text, 231-2

— — XII (Girnar) :

Annotated trans., 158-61; dialect, 247, 248; essence of religions, 76, 159-61; honour to all sects, 65, 72-3, 158-60; Strī-adhyakṣa-mahāmātras, 31, 39, 43, 160, 210; text, 232-3; Vrajabhūmika or Vachabhūmika, 58, 160

— — XIII (Shāhbāzgarhi) :

Annotated trans., 162-70; Antas, 42, 166, 167 n., 211; ascetics, 103, 163, 164; Asoka's Buddhism, 18, 162-3, 213, 214; Ceylon, Tāmrāparṇī, 36, 166; conquest abrogated, 38, 58, 163, 164-5; Conquest, True, 74, 165-6; date, 40, 166; dialect, 247, 248; Dūtas, and their moral conquests, 29, 30, 38, 56, 165-9, 211-12; forgiveness of enemies, 20-1, 165; Hellenistic contemporaries, 32, 40, 41, 166; householders, virtues of, 107, 163-4; Kalinga conquest, King's remorse for, 16-17, 162-5; King's preaching of Dharma, 72, 163; next world, 75, 169, 170; not published in Kalinga, 13, 162 n.;

- outside peoples reassured, but admonished, 21, 58, 59, 165 ; primitive condition of Kalinga, 28-9, 164-5 ; relatives, 6, 163 ; servants and dependents, 103, 163 ; text, 233-5
- Rock Edict XIV (Girnar) :
Annotated trans., 171-2 ; dialect, 247, 248 ; dominion, vastness of, 14, 171 ; epilogue, Edict as, 19, 171 ; imperfections, 16, 50, 171-2 ; King's orders, written down, 55, 172 ; text, 235-6
- Rock Edicts : date of issue, 37, 43, 138 n., 214 ; dialects, 247-8 ; earlier than Pillar Edicts, 41-3 ; issued in two stages or chronological orders, 43 ; purpose of, 18-19, 185-6
- Royal harems, 6, 30, 31, 48, 143-4, 145, 190-1, 210 ; pleasure trips, abolished, 20, 26, 38, 150-2 ; table, 20, 62, 130 ; titles, 11-12, 105, 108, 150 n.
- Rudradāman's inscription cited, 51, 93-4, 105
- Rummindei (Lummini), author's visit to, 202 n. ; pillar at, 85, 87, 202 n., 203-4 n. ; temple and sculpture at, 202-4 n. (see Commemorative Pillar Inscription I)
- Rupnath Minor Pillar Edict, x, 13, 43, 60
- Sacrifice with bloodshed abolished, 20, 61, 66, 128-9, 130
- Sahadeva, 33
- Sahasram Minor Rock Edict, ix, 13, 43
- Saintliness, sādhutā, 70, 191 ?
- Śākyasīmha, a name of Buddha, 62
- Śākyas, Buddhists, 8, 60, 62, 109 n.
- Samantapāsādikā*, 33, 110 n.
- Samāpā (Jagauda), 16, 52, 126
- Samatata, 15
- Sambala, 33
- Sambodhi, enlightenment, Tree of Knowledge, 26, 46, 106
- Sambuddha doctrine, 46
- Sanigha* or Sangha : as the entire Buddhist Order, 67 ; Asoka and, 37, 46, 54-5, 60, 63, 64, 67, 68-9, 109, 119 n. ; Asoka dictates the true Dharma, 43, 117-19 ; Asoka's orders against schism, 54-5, 64, 68, 193-8, 199, 200 ; Dharma-Mahāmātras and, 31, 61, 190, 194-6, 210 ; divisions in, 68 ; headship of, 45-6 ; laws of concerning schism, 196-9 n.
- Samprati, grandson of Asoka, 8, 9 ; disloyalty of, 37 n.
- Sānchī, pillar at, 86-7, 93 (see Minor Pillar Edict III) ; relics found at, 34-5 ; sculpture at, 26 ; stūpa at, 81, 105-6 ; why favoured by Asoka, 8
- Sanghamitrā, daughter of Devī, 8, 9, 10, 35, 44, 45, 104, 110 n.
- Sankāśya or Sankassa, pillar at, 83, 83-4
- Sankisa, pillar at, 84 n.
- Sanskrit and Asokan dialects, 247, 248, 249
- Sāriputta, 27
- Sarnath M.P.E. (see Minor Pillar Edict I) ; pillars at, 14, 87, 93
- Śāstri, Vidhuśekhara, 145 n.
- Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*, 247
- Satiyaputra, 15, 21, 131
- Schism among Buddhists, 54-5, 60, 64, 68, 193-4, 199, 200
- Scribe, lipikara, 55, 57, 117, 172
- Seal, Sir B. N., on representative government, 49
- Sects, impartially treated by Asoka, 64-5, 72-3, 77, 101, 158-60, 185 ; not to be segregated, 65, 149 ; supervision of, 31, 101, 210 ; treatment of popular Brahmanism exceptional, 66
- Self-control, saṁyama, 72, 150
- Self-examination, 67, 71, 73-4, 173, 175-6
- Self-exertion, 73, 109, 113, 156-7
- Self-indulgence, 174, 175
- Selukos or Seleukos, defeated by Chandragupta, 13, 15
- Senart, authority on inscriptions, xi ; (on) Aparāntas and Antas, 14c n. ; Asoka's selection of Buddhist texts, 119-20 n. ; legendary cruelty of Asoka, 4, 17 n. ; Rock Edicts, 128 n.
- Servants and hirelings or dependents, Śūdras, 103 ; five duties to, 154 n. ; proper treatment of, 154, 158, 163, 192

- Shāhbāzgarhi Rock Edict, viii, 13, 14 n., 39 (see Rock Edicts I, VII, VIII, XI, XIII)
- Shakespeare quoted, 17
- Shipping, 36
- Sin, pāpa, āsinava: as bondage, 157; blindness to, 175; fear of, 71, 173; forgiveness of, 75, 179-80; meaning of, 174 n.; to be trodden down, 139
- Singh, Chyt, viii
- Singh, Maharaja Ranjit, viii
- Slaughter, abstention from, 69 (see animal slaughter)
- Slaves, proper treatment of, 154, 158
- Small nations, rights of, respected by Asoka, 21, 58, 126-7
- Smith, V. A., xi; (cited on) Asokan stone-cutting, 91-2, 93; Asoka's fleet, 36; Buddhist influence on Western thought, 77; chronological method, 45; high literacy in Asoka's time, 102-3; Indian originality in art, 99; King's birthday and jail deliveries, 185 n.; language of the Edicts, 102; lion or garuḍa? 90; Lat Bhairo pillar, 85; proof of Asoka's zeal for Buddhism, 68-9; Sankisa, 84 n.; Satiya-putra, 131 n.; sculpture at Rummindei, 203; transport of pillars, 92, 93
- Smṛitis*, 47, 143 n.
- Society based on the joint family, 17; classes and castes, 17, 101, 103
- Soldiers, Kṣatriyas, 103, 141; of Kalinga, 162 n., 164 n.
- Solomon, 1
- Sona, 33, 34
- Sonari, 35
- Sopārā Rock Edict, x, 13, 14 n., 141 n., 171 n.
- Speech, restraint of, 73
- Spiritual insight, 67, 72, 175
- Spooner, Dr. D. B., excavations of at Pāṭaliputra, 96, 97
- Śramaṇas, ascetics, 17, 65, 101, 103, 141 n.
- Śrāvastī, 27; Jetavana Vihāra and pillars at, 83, 84
- Śrīnagara, supposed Asokan city, 79
- States, equality of, 21, 126-7
- Statuary, 97
- Stevenson, Mrs., Heart of Jainism, 71 n.
- "Stone bearing a figure," 201
- Stone-cutter's art, 98
- Strabo on sailing the Ganges, 95 n.
- Stūpas, topes, attributed to Asoka, 79, 80-1; Bharhut, 81, 88, 152 n.; Kesariya, 83; Mahā-śāla, 86; Niglīva, 81, 84; noted by Fa-hien, 80; noted by Yuan Chwang, 80 n., 82, 83, 84-5; Sānchi, 81, 88, 105-6; wide distribution of, 14-15
- Stūpas, pre-Asokan, 88
- Subhadrāṅgī, or Dharmā, mother of Asoka, 2-3, 9; a Brahman, 2; a Kṣatriya, 3
- Sudarśana artificial lake, 13, 94
- Sudatta and Sugātra, names of Tisya, 6, 9
- Śukranīti on trees and water supply, 189 n.
- Sumana, grandson of Asoka, 8, 9, 35, 36, 45
- Sumitta or Sumitra, 45, 63
- Superiors, "men of high caste or pay," obedience to, 69, 163 n.
- Susa, 95
- Susīma or Sumana, brother of Asoka, 2, 9; death in war of succession, 3, 5 n.; son of, 18 n., 41, 62-3; Viceroy at Taxila, 3, 125 n.
- Suvarṇabhūmi, 33, 34
- Suvarṇagiri, 6, 16, 107; princely Viceroy of, 51, 123-4 n.; supposed site in gold region, 107-8 n.
- Svastika* symbol or sacred monogram, 126 n., 245 n.
- Tāmralipti, 15, 35, 36
- Tārānath on Asoka, 4
- Taxila or Takḥhasilā, 15; Asoka supersedes Susīma as Viceroy, 3, 51; Asoka's brothers as Viceroy, 6, 124 n.; Asoka's sons as Viceroy, 51, 124 n., 125; coins and jewels found at, 98; court language of 247; Kuṇāla as Viceroy, 46, 51; official tours, 28, 57, 125-6, 208-9; revolts at, 3, 46, 52, 125 n.

- Teachers, five modes of service to, 155 n.
- Terminology, Asoka's original, 74-5
- Terra-cottas, 97
- Theocracy, Asoka and, 1
- Thera-gāthā Commentary*, 7, 9
- Therapentā, 77 n.
- Thomas, Dr. F. W., xi; cited, 150 n., 156 n., 180 n., 194 n., 195 n., 204 n.; (on) officials, 56 n., 107 n., 133 n., 134 n., 190 n.; pali-godha and pali-bodha, 142 n.; sects, 31 (and see Cambridge History of India)
- Tieftenthaler, Padre, viii
- Tirthikas, 6, 141 n.
- Tissa, King of Ceylon, 12, 35
- Tisya or Tissa, Asoka's uterine brother, 2, 3, 4, 45, 63; legendary conversion by Asoka, 6-7, 45; ordination of, 45, 110 n.; other names of, 6, 7, 9; Viceregent of Asoka, 7, 44, 51
- Tisya days, 54, 123, 128, 183, 184
- Tisyarakṣitā, last Chief Queen of Asoka, 8, 9, 46; legendary jealousy of Bodhi-Tree, 4-5, 46
- Tivara, son of Kāruvākī, 8, 9, 201
- Tod, Major James, viii
- Toleration, Asoka's conception of, 65, 72-3, 158-60; limitations of, 66, 68
- Tolls superintendent, 57
- Topes (see Stūpas)
- Topra Pillar Edict, 14, 86; removal of pillar to Delhi, 93; text of, used for translation, 172 n. (see Pillar Edicts)
- Torture, 30 n., 121 n., 123, 143 n., 209
- Tosali (Dhauḷi), 6, 16; princely Viceroy, 51, 120, 124 n.
- Transit dues on imported goods, 57
- Transport problem of Asokan pillars, 92-3
- Trees planted along roads, 38, 42, 58, 132
- Trident symbol, 99
- Triennial tours, 28, 57
- Truthfulness, satyam, 70, 116, 175, 191
- Tusāṣpha, Raja, Viceroy at Girnar, 51, 94, 167 n.
- Udyāna, 15
- Ujjain or Ujjeni, 15; Asoka at, 3, 4, 8, 44, 124 n.; official tours, 28, 57, 124, 208-9; princely Viceroy, 51, 123, 124 n.
- United Provinces, literacy in, 102
- Universal religion, Asoka's basis for, 76
- Upagupta of Mathurā (Moggali-putta Tissa), Asoka's preceptor, 27, 110 n., 203 n.; fifth Vinaya teacher, 63; given cave-dwellings, 89; informed of Asoka's building aspirations, 79; legend of the 84,000 vihāras, 80-1; ordains Mahendra, 45; presides at Third Buddhist Council, 32, 60-1, 63; relics of, 35; retires and is recalled, 45, 46; sends out missionaries (theras), 32, 46 (see Pilgrimage)
- Upaṇiṣads* echoed in Edicts, 66 n., 116 n.
- Upatisa-pasine*, 118
- Uposatha* days, 61, 183-4, 195 n.
- Utriya, 33
- Uttara, 33, 34
- Vāchhi Suvijayata, 34, 35
- Vaiśālī (modern Basarh), Buddhist Council at, 68; pillar near, 86
- Vaiśyas, 103
- Vanavāsi, 33, 34
- Vardhamāna Mahāvīra, founder of Jainism, 86
- Vāsudeva, column to, 104
- Vedas*, 47
- Vedic origins of Asokan pillars, 99
- Vedisa, 8, 44, 46
- Vedisagiri, Great Vihāra of, 8
- Viceregent, 52
- Viceroy, brothers or sons of Asoka, 123; princely, in Edicts and legends, 6, 51, 52, 143 n.; subordinate officials of, 52, 56-7, 107, 125-6, 127
- Viṣṭudabha, 8
- Vimānavatthu* account of heaven, 75
- Vinaya Piṭaka*, 107 n., 247
- Vinaya-samukasa*, 23, 118
- Vinaya* teachers, 63
- Vitāśoka, brother of Asoka, 3, 4, 7, 9; name sometimes applied to Tisya, 6, 9; studies—becomes a monk, 7

- Vrajabhūmika*, guardian of routes and pastures, 58, 160
 Vrijian monks, 68
 Waddell cited, 63
 Wages, law of, 154-5 n.
 War-drums become call to Dharma, 20-1, 38, 58, 136
 War losses of the Kalingas, 16-17, 162
 "War of the Relics", 60-1 n.
 Watters (on) Bo-Tree legend, 5 ;
     Nativity sculpture at Rummindei, 203 ; tope seen by Wukung, 204 n.
 Wells and watering places, 22, 30, 38, 39, 58, 132, 188, 189
 Wheel symbol or dharma-chakra, 83, 84, 90, 91, 99
 White Elephant symbol, 61, 75, 136 n., 137 n., 170 n.
 Wilson, Rev. Dr. J., ix, x
 Women, supervision of, 30, 31, 39, 43, 143-4, 160, 190-1, 210
 Woolner, A. C., xi, 143 n., 172 n., 173 n., 254 ; on rest-houses, 189 n.
 Writing, antiquity of, in India, 246-7
- Yavana or Yona country of the Greeks, 104
 Yavanas (Yonas, Ionians, Greeks), 15, 21, 29, 30, 77, 78 n., 140, 168
 Yona province, a Greek colony, 32, 168 ; not Hinduised, 103 ; without ascetics, 64
 Yonarattham, 34
 Yuan Chwang cited : Asoka and Tisya, 6 ; Asoka's Buddhist preceptor, 27, 63 ; — building activities, 79 ; — gift of Kashmir, 79 ; — "hell", 4 n., — last days, 37 n. ; — stūpas, 80 n., 82, 83, — vihāras, 79, 82, Bodhi-Tree legend, 4-5, 154 n. ; cave dwellings, 89, Indian measures of distance, 188 n. ; inscriptions misread, vii : inscriptions not identified, 14 n. ; Kāñchīpura, 131 n. ; pillars not ascribed to Asoka, 86 n., 87 ; Rummindei pillar, 85, 202 n., 204 n. ; topes mentioned indicate vastness of empire, 15

ADDENDA

I

A supposed Asokan inscription in Aramaic script found at Taxila.

A new Asokan inscription of twelve lines written in the Aramaic language and script of the 3rd century B. C. was discovered at Taxila by Sir John Marshall in 1914-15. A facsimile of it was published in the Annual Archaeological Survey Report for the year. Later, Dr. E. Herzfeld deciphered the inscription written from right to left, but was unable to explain the text. In lines 9 and 12 Herzfeld reads the words 'mran Prydr' and 'imran Prydrsh' which are taken to mean 'Our Lord Priyadarśi'. In line 10 Herzfeld reads the word 'hḷkoth' which he renders as 'Vmlkoth' meaning 'And his queens' or perhaps 'His kingdoms'. In line 11 he reads the words 'Vap bnvhy' which he takes to signify 'And his sons.'

The Aramaic script like Kharoshthi was written from right to left and was used in their inscriptions by Achaemenian Kings. The Aramaic language was once extensively used throughout Western Asia as the language of commerce.

It may be noted that the term Piyadasi or Priyadarśi is not the name of a king but his title, a title which was used both by Asoka and his grandfather Chandragupta. It may, however, be taken for certain that this particular Aramaic Inscription of Taxila was issued by Piyadasi Asoka rather than his grandfather who is not credited with the issue of any such inscriptions. Asoka was the first king in India to have issued inscriptions in the manner of the old Achaemenian kings. The contents of this inscription also are supposed to be Buddhist and therefore more Asokan. For instance, line 5 (?) contains the word 'Huh' Good, i. e., morally good like the good thoughts, good deeds and good words of Zoroastrianism comparable to 'Airo Atthangiko Maggo' of Buddhism (D. C. Sircar's Select inscriptions p. 81).

Further, the reference in this inscription to the queens and princes may be compared with the references in Asokan inscriptions to his queens and princes and their charities.

It may be further noted that the Achaemenian conquest of some parts of North Western India described in the Achaemenian inscription as Gadāra (Gandhāra) and Hidush (=Hindu=Sindhu=land of the Indus) by Emperor Darius I (c. 516 B.C.) brought into these regions the Aramaic language and script which became thus known in India in those days. Accordingly, Pāṇini with his mastery of linguistic facts and formations could not fail to have within his purview the existence of this foreign language and script in his own native land, Gandhāra. This foreign script he describes as 'Yavanāni' (= Yavanānām līṇi =script of the Yavanas). Pāṇini's time is taken by Sir R. G. Bhandarkar to be 750 B. C. It should be at least as early as the time of the Achaemenian Empire.

These foreign settlements which thus date from the Persian conquest of India extended farther into the interior of India in the time of Chandragupta Maurya as a result of his counter-conquest of the Syrian Empire of which the eastern parts known as Gedrosia (Baluchistan), Aria (Herat), Arachosia (Kandahar) and Paropamsidai (Hindukush) were ceded to him by Emperor Seleukos in c. 304 B.C.

The existence of this foreign population at the remote metropolis of the Mauryan Empire at Pāṭaliputra called for appropriate administrative arrangements to look after their special interests. The Greek ambassador Megasthenes wrote from his first-hand knowledge that the municipal administration of Pāṭaliputra included a Foreign Committee in charge of the interests of the city's foreign population.

At the time of Asoka we find that these foreign peoples won their status as autonomous communities within his empire. Their political and cultural interests were duly recognized by Asoka. They are specifically mentioned in Rock Edicts V and XIII as Yonas and Kāmbojas. Their special cultural needs were thus recognized by Asoka by issuing an inscription in the Aramaic language and script at Taxila, the then most important centre of foreign population in India. It was Asoka's zeal for his new faith that led him to preach it in a foreign colony in its own occidental language and script.

Their cultural autonomy is further recognized by Asoka by his statement that in the Yona country Society, unlike that of India, was casteless. It knew only of two varṇas or classes, Employers (Ārya) and Employed (Dās-), and therefore his regular Dharma was not preached among them.

The existence of a strong Yona colony in Asoka's empire is further proved by the interesting fact that a Yona chief was recruited by Asoka as his provincial Governor of Aparānta-Surāshṭra. He is named Yavanarāja Tushāspa Rāshṭriya who succeeded Vaiśya Pushyagupta as Governor under his grandfather Chandragupta (Junāgaḍh Inscription of Rudradāman, c. 150A. D.).

To sum up, originally the term Yavana denoted the Ionian Greeks as subjects of the Persian Empire. But the language and script of the Empire were Aramaic. This Aramaic was first introduced into India by the Achaemenian conquest of Gandhāra and the land of the Sindhu. Thus when Pāṇini uses the term 'Yavanāni', he had before him this concrete example of a foreign script which must have been Aramaic.

Later, the term Yavana came to imply any Mlechchha or a foreigner such as Iranian or Ionian. By the time Asoka, the Yonas and Kāmbojas formed important foreign settlements in his empire. These Yonas were not to be confused with the Ionian Greeks. They were Iranians for whom Asoka issued his inscription in their local Aramaic script. Later, Sanskrit texts, like Vishṇu Purāṇa, describe these Yavanas and Kāmbojas by their repugnant customs, such as keeping beard, shaving the head and beef-eating.

We may, lastly, note how Rudradāmana I describes the Iranian chief Rājā Tusāspa as Yavanarāja, showing that the term Yavana was a term for a foreigner without reference to the particular people or community to which he belonged.

II

Yerragudi Inscriptions.

Discovery : Yerragudi is situated some eighty miles north-east of Śiddāpur on the southern border of the Kurnool District and at a distance of some eight miles from Gooty, a Railway Station on the Raichur-Madras Section of the Southern Rly. In the vicinity of this village, the late Mr. Anu Ghose, F.C.S., F.G.S., a Geologist, discovered many years ago, engraved on six boulders of a hill called Yenakoṇḍā (Elephant Hill), another version of the Fourteen Rock Edicts of Asoka, together with a Minor Rock Edict. He kept this discovery to himself for a long time, and confided it to me as his classmate. Finally, he announced it to the Archaeological Department. Then these inscriptions were published by late Daya Ram Sahni in the Annual Progress Report of the Archaeological Survey for 1928-29, pp. 161-67.

Script : The script is Brāhmī and does not call for any remarks except that in the Minor Edict as many as eight of the twenty-three lines (Viz. 2, 4, 6, 9, 11, 13, 14, and 23) are inscribed from right to left and the rest as usual. If we eliminate from consideration lines 8 and 14, the first fifteen lines are at once found to be in boustrophedom style, i.e., written alternately from left to right and from right to left. No other Brāhmī or Kharoshthī inscription is written in this manner. The dialect of the Rock Edicts is Magadhan, as pointed out by Dr. D. C. Sircar.

Text : The text of the Fourteen Rock Edicts comes nearest to that of the Kālsī version.

In the Minor Rock inscription the first portion up to the middle of line 12 closely follows the corresponding portion of the Brahmagiri, and other versions. The second section from middle of line 12 up to the end contains much new matter and its Text and Translation are given below, together with some comments.

Yerraguḍi Minor Rock Edict

TEXT

12. ....hevaṁ Devānāṁpiye āha yathā Devānaṁ-
13. piye āhā tathā kaṭaviya yepi rājūke ānapitaviye
14. te dānī jānapadam āna-
15. payisati rāṭhikāni cha mātāpitūsu
16. sususitaviye hemeva garūsu susūsitaviye pānesu
17. dayitaviye sacha vataviya
17. susuma dhammagunā pavatitaviyā hevaṁ tuphe
18. ānapayātha Devānaṁ-piyasa vachanena hemeva ānapa-
18. yatha hathiyārohāni kāranakāni yūgyachariyāni
19. barṁbhanāni cha tuphe hevaṁ nivesayā-
19. tha atevāsīni yārisā porānā pakiti iyaṁ susūsitaviye
20. apachāyanā ya vā sava me āchariyasa
20. yathāchārīna āchariyasa nātikāni yathāraha
21. nātikesu pavatitaviye hesāpi
21. amtevāsīsu yathāraha pavatitaviye yārisā porānā
22. pakiti yathāraha yathā iyaṁ
22. āroke siyā hevaṁ tuphe ānapayātha nivesayātha
23. cha amtevāsīni hevaṁ De-
23. vānaṁpiye ānapayati.

TRANSLATION

Thus declares (king) Devānāṁpriya (literally, Beloved of the Gods) : Whatever Devānāṁpriya ordains, that must be carried out. The Rājūkas (Provincial Governors) are to be thus instructed (by the Mahāmātras concerned) : That they should forthwith (idānim) instruct the people of the countryside (Jānapadam) and also the Rāshṭrikas (in-charge) to the following effect : that Mother and Father are to be obeyed ; so should be obeyed the Preceptor ; All creatures are to be treated with compassion ; Truth is to be spoken. These glorious (śushma) moral virtues (dharma-guṇāḥ) are to be cultivated.

Likewise, Ye (Mahāmātras) are also being thus instructed in terms of the king's order : De ye thus instruct (āñyāpayata) the different classes of people such as (1) the Elephant Corps (Hastyārohaṇa); (2) Kāraṇakas [Kāyas-thas=Scribes or Judges (Prāḍavivāka)]; (3) Charioteers (Yugyacharyān=Rathārohān); (4) Brāhmaṇas, i.e. Teachers.

Thus, further, should ye instruct (niveśayata) the Brāhmaṇas (teachers) that they should on their part admonish (niveśayata) their pupils (añtevāsinaḥ) that they should, in accordance with the traditional rule of conduct (purāṇī prakṛiti) observe the following, (idaṁ) duties : (1) that the teacher (āchārya) be obeyed (śūsrūshitavya) (by them) ; (2) Full (sarva) service (apachāyanā=pūjā) of the teacher (āchāryasya) by pupils (añtevāsinaḥ) as his worthy devotees (yathāchariṇaḥ āchāryasya) ; (3) that they (the pupils) should similarly behave towards their kinsmen.

Likewise should these their kinsmen be instructed.

Similarly, this time-honoured principle of dedication of pupils to the service (apachāyanā) of their teachers should be duly (yathārham) established (pravartayitavya) among them, in accordance with the traditional rules of Brahmacharya.

Likewise should ye (teachers) admonish (āñyāpayata) and instruct (niveśayata) the student population that they be steadfast (arokā=dṛiḍhā)<sup>1</sup> in their pursuit of these traditional rules of studentship.

Thus ordains (king) Devānāmpriya.

This Minor Rock Edict is unique in its new matter which is not found in any other of its versions. Its meaning, however, is not quite clear. Asoka seems to be extending here the scope of his preaching of Dharma. He appears to enjoin its preaching among both the civil and militar classes, and especially among the youth, the student population of the country as its future citizens who should be trained in disciplined life. The teachers are also enlisted by him, along with the administrative officers, the Mahāmātras, in the work of carrying his Dharma or message to the student population as the appropriate sphere of their work, while the rural welfare officers, the Rāshṭrikas, are to work for the same mission in the country-side in their charge.

1. Some scholars read tiroka and take it in the sense of "possessed of three-fold comfort of attainment of bliss in three lokas" (oka=refuge).

III

Gavimaṭh and Pālkiṅḍu Minor Rock Edicts

Two new versions of the Minor Rock Edict of Asoka were found near Kopbāl (old name Kopananagara), which is about 60 miles from Śiddāpura and a Railway Station on the Southern Railway situated between Hospet and Gadag junctions. In the vicinity of the Kopbāl town two Brāhmī inscriptions were discovered in 1931 by Sri N. B. Śāstri of Kopbāl, one engraved on the Gavimaṭh rock and another on the Pālkiṅḍu hill.

The two inscriptions are almost identical and represent another version of the Minor Rock Edict of Asoka already known in slightly different forms at Rūpanāth, Sahasram, Bairāṭ (which version agrees very closely with that of Gavimaṭh), Brahmagiri, Śiddāpura, Jatiṅga-Rāmeśvara Māski and Yerraguḍi. These two new versions add nothing to the general contents of the Edict, but with the exception of Rūpanāth, the Gavimaṭh version is the only one completely legible.<sup>1</sup>

IV

Rajula Mandagiri Rock-Edict.

Recently, another Asokan Minor Rock Edict has been discovered at a hamlet called Rajula Mandagiri in Village Chinnatulti in Pattikouda Taluq of Kurnool District in Andhra State. The place is about 20 miles from Yerraguḍi.

1. These two versions were edited by Dr. R. L. Turner and published in the Hyderabad Arch. Series, No. 10, 'The Gavimaṭh and Pālkiṅḍu Inscriptions of Asoka', (1932).

V

A Minor Rock Edict discovered at Gujjarra in Vindhya Pradesh.

A Minor Rock Edict of Asoka has been recently discovered by the Deputy Director-General of Archaeology, Dr. B. Ch. Chhabra, at a village called Gujjarra which is about 11 miles from Datia and also from Jhansi. The hillock behind the rock bearing the Inscription is known as Siddhan-Kī-toriyā, 'the rock of the Siddhas or the Emancipated Ones.'

This Inscription is the tenth version of Asoka's Minor Rock Edict.

The importance of this Inscription lies in the fact that, out of a total of over 200 Inscriptions of Asoka, this is the only one which mentions his full designation and name in the passage : Devānaṃpiyasa Piyadasino Asokarājasa. The Minor Rock Edict found at Maski also mentions the name Asoka but not his full appellation or titles by which he is described in most other Edicts, such as (1) Devānaṃpiya Piyadasi Rājā (2) Devānaṃpiya Piyadasi (3) Devānaṃpiya or (4) Priyadasi lājā Māgadhe Bairat). Maski uses the form Devānaṃpiyasa Asokasa (Adapted from a Note kindly supplied by Dr. B. Ch. Chhabra).

In conclusion, it may be noted that these Minor Rock Edicts were practically as widely distributed by Asoka through his dominion (Vijita) as his other Rock or Pillar Edicts. They are found in most of the Provinces of his far-flung Empire, from Rajasthan in the North through Hyderabad and Andhra up to Mysore. This publicity was due to Asoka's decision to lay emphasis on the special feature embodied in his Minor Rock Edicts which put in a nutshell, and present pithily his main religious injunction as the substance of all his teachings repeated and dispersed through all his other Inscriptions. That central injunction, which may be taken as the basis of his religious system or Dharma, as distinguished from the details of its doctrines and practices as enumerated in his other Edicts, is the supreme need of uttermost self - exertion (parākrama) as the primary requisite of spiritual life and progress for all persons of all ranks, high or low, and especially for those of high rank with its many distractions. Asoka gives eloquent expression in this Edict to his deep feeling and conviction that a steady and strenuous practice of morals and cultivation of proper and correct conduct in all relations of life by the people will help to make them godly and establish on earth the Kingdom, the Heaven, of Righteousness (āmmisaṃ devā samita munisā misaṃ devā kaṭā).

This thought is expressed in another sentence : Khudāke chā udāre chā dhammam charaṃtā yogaṃ yunjāntā 'Let small and great (equally) devote themselves to the practice of morality so that they may be united with the Divine'.

VI

The Kandahar (Shar-i-Kuna) Inscription of Asoka

This rock inscription has been recently discovered near Kandahar in Afghanistan and is unique as a bilingual record written in both Greek and Aramaic. The Greek version was meant for the Greek (Yona --Yavana) subjects of Asoka's empire, and the Aramaic for the non-Greek foreigners like the Kāmbojas, of Asoka's Rock Edicts V and XIII.

Texts : The two texts have been rendered into Asokan Prakṛit by Dr. D. C. Sircar (E I: XXXIII) as follows :

Greek : (A) Daśa-vash-abhisitena raña Priyadāśina janaspi dhramanuśasti pravaṭita.

Aramaic : (A) Daśa-vash-abhisitena raña Priyadyāśina pamikena no (=naḥ) tada dhramanuśasti pravaṭita.

G. (B) Tata chu tena manuśa baḍhataṃ dhrama-yuta kaṭa praṇa cha vaḍhita hita-sukhena savraputha-viyaṃ.

A : (B) Tata apayasa hini jata savraspi cha janaspi tena dupaṭi-bhaga nivaṭita ! Asti pi sam ti cha priti cha savraputhaviyaṃ.

G : (C) Raña chu praṇ-arāmbho paritijita savrehi cha manuśchi ludakehi cha savrehi kevaṭehi cha raño paritijita vihinā bhutanam.

A : (C) Eta cha pi bhutaṃ. Sup-aṭhaya chu rañño no spamikasa lanukaṃ arabhiyati. Tasa cha draśana savra manuśa na arabhaṃti Evaṃ pi ye cha Kevaṭa te pi cha niyaṃena saṃyata.

G : (D) Yesaṃ chun=asi saṃyamo te pi cha saṃyata bhuta yatha tena tena śakam.

A : (D) Evaṃ pi yesaṃ cha n=asi saṃyamo te picha saṃyata bhuta.

G. (E) Te pi cha mata-pitushu buḍheshu cha suśrūshaṃti : Vadiśaṃ no bhuta-pruvaṃ.

A. (E) Savre cha mata pitushu suśrūshanti vuḍheṣhu cha suśrūshanti yatharaham yadiśam tasa tasa Kaṭavaṃ aropitaṃ.

G : (F) Evaṃ cha karamina te pacha hita-sukhena vaḍhisamti bādham cha c vaḍhisamti.

A : (F) Dhrama-yutanam chu kho paratra n=asti vicharaṇa.

A : (G) Savre cha manuśa dhrama-charaṇena abhumnata abhumnamisaṃti cha=eva.

Translation :

Greek Text. After the 10th year of his coronation was inaugurated (pravartita) by King Priyadarśi ('Our Lord' Spamikena no in Aramaic text) his preaching of Dharma (Morality) among the people (Janaspi).

And, since then (tata chu), the people have been rendered more moral (dharmayuta) by him (by his moral propaganda, dharmānuśasti), and all living beings (prāṇāḥ) all over the world (sarvaprithivyām—India) have had their welfare (hita) and happiness (sukha) increased (vardhitāḥ).

Aramaic Text : Since then there has been (jata) decrease (hāni) of suffering (apāya), and for all people misfortunes have been averted (dushpratibhāgāḥ nivartitāḥ) through his instrumentality. And there has been (asti) all over the world peace (sānti) as well as fellow-feeling (priti),

Greek Text : And by the King also has been renounced (parityakta) slaughter of living beings, and also by all people, the King's own hunters (lubdhakaiḥ) as well as fishing folks (Kaivartaiḥ). By them all has been renounced violence towards life.

Aramaic Text : And , besides, this has happened in regard to food (sūpārthāya) also : there has been reduction (laghukam) of slaughter (of animals and birds) by our Lord (svāmī) the King, and, after seeing that (tasya cha darśanāt), all people have abstained from slaughter (na ālabhante), and this also (that) those who are fishermen by occupation, even they are restrained (saṁyata) by moral rules (niyamena).

Greek Text : And thus (cha tu), of those who were not used to restraint (saṁyamo), even they have become restrained (saṁyataḥ bhūtaḥ), as far as they are capable of it respectively (yathā tena śakyam).

And, further (api cha), they are also ready to listen to (the behests of) (śusrūshanti) of their mother and father, and their elders (ṽṛiddheshu), as was not the case before (na bhūta-pūrvam).

And, thus doing, they will henceforth (paścāt) progress in prosperity (hita) and happiness (sukha) and such progress will be steadily on the increase (bāḍham).

Aramaic version : And obedience to mother and father and obedience to elders (are now forthcoming) in accordance with the obligations (kartavyam) resting on the different parties concerned (āroṇitam).

And of people who are devoted to duty (dharmayuta), there is certainly no judgement (vichāraṇa) (awaiting them) in the other world (paratra).

By the practice of morality (dharmā-charaṇena), all men are already uplifted (abhyunnata) and will also be so uplifted in future.

This Edict has been rightly ranked by Dr. D. C. Sircar a minor Rock Edict of Asoka, Minor Rock Edict IV. This is indicated by the fact that its subject-matter is of a limited scope, and is not general, like that of his main Rock Edicts or Pillar Edicts. It, however, brings to light some new facts in Asoka's life and reign. Its provenance is important as confirming the literary evidence as to the extent of Asoka's Empire which was a Greater India extending towards the north-west beyond the natural boundaries of India (Undivided) up to the borders of Persia. Thus the location of this Edict in Arachosia or Kandahar furnishes the only epigraphic evidence so far known to corroborate the literary evidence of Greek historical works as to India's North-Western frontiers. These works record the fact that, as a result of the defeat inflicted in c. 304 B.C. by the Indian King, Chandragupta Maurya, Asoka's grandfather, upon the Syrian Emperor Seleukos who invaded India, the entire Eastern portion of his Empire comprising the regions then known as Gedrosia (Baluchistan), Arachosia (Kandahar), Aria (Herat) and Paropamisadae (Hindukush) was annexed by the victor to his empire. Accordingly, Asoka who came into the possession of this extensive empire by inheritance was able to call as his immediate neighbour( anta ) in his rock Edict II (and also in Rock Edict XIII), the Syrian King Antiochus (Am̐tiyoko). He also counts in his R. E. V and XIII the Yonas (or Greeks) and the Kāmbojas as his own subjects inhabiting those parts of Afghanistan.

This Edict also definitely dates Asoka's religious propagandism from the 10th year after his coronation i.e. after 260 B. C. His other Edicts indicate only the stages in his religious history. The turning-point of that history is the 8th regnal year of Asoka, the year 262 B. C., the date of Asoka's conquest of Kalinga mentioned in Rock Edict XIII. It resulted in colossal casualties and suffering inflicted upon the brave Kalingas who fought for their freedom. The horrors of this bloody conquest made the conqueror a changed man. Asoka now changed from the creed of violence to the opposite creed of non-violence. Hitherto, (before 262 B. C.) as stated in his minor Rock-Edict I, he had been only an indifferent Buddhist, a mere upāsaka, and continued as such for "more than 2½ years," and was thus up to the cruelties of a conquest in violation of the Buddhist creed, the principle of sanctity of life. Asoka's moral change of 262 B.C. was thus preceded by this period of indifference, 265-262 B.C. After 262 B. C. his interest in Buddhism became intense (tivra) and expressed itself in his practice of the Dharma of Non-violence in his own life (Dharmasīlana), his devotion to Dharma (Dharmakāmatā), and its public preaching (Dharmānuśāsti). The process of this inner change or moral revolution in Asoka, according to MRE I, took "more than a year", i.e. up to 260 B.C. After 260 B.C., the 10th year of his reign, according to this new Edict, Asoka officially organised (pravartana) his work of moral propagandism (Dharmānuśāsti) with utmost (tivra) exertion (Parākrama) [ MRE I ]. His work soon yielded results. These are described with new and concrete details in this Edict, supplementing those so far known from the other Edicts. These are only generally indicated in MRE I which states that "The people of Jambudvīpa were gradually becoming more godly, or religious-minded (Amisā samānī munisā Jambudīpasi misā devehi).

It was about this time, after his 10th regnal year, that Asoka set out on his first pilgrimage to the holiest place of Buddhism, viz., Bodhgaya, as stated in his R.E. VIII. The present Edict throws some new light on the beginnings and results of Asoka's moral propagandism (Dharmānuśāsti, a term also used in R. E. XIII). According to Aramaic Text, Asoka made the beginning by himself setting the example of Non-Violence in giving up (parityakta) slaughter of living creatures for purposes of his own food (sūpārthāya) and turning a vegetarian. 'Seeing the royal example' (tasya cha darśanāt), the people at large also abstained from violence towards life (vihimsā bhūtānām), even the royal hunters (lubdhakas) and fishing folks (kaivartas) who derived their living from these violent pursuits.

The general result following Asoka's inauguration (pravartana) of this new religion (Dharma) has also been described in this Edict in new terms. The people have been rendered more moral (dharmayuta), and all living beings have had now their good and happiness (hita-sukha) increased through spread of Non-Violence. There has been a decrease of suffering (apāya) and misfortunes (dushpratibhāga) for the people, while all the world over there is a reign of Peace (Śānti) and fellow-feeling (Prīti), and abstention from violence (Saṁnyama). The prevailing spirit of Non-Violence in the country also raised the level of moral life in the home and family through the cultivation by its youths of proper relations with their father and mother, as well as Elders, to whose behests they were now ready to listen. This practice of Morality or Non-Violence was the most potent factor of social uplift (abhyunmata) for all time.

Asoka thus stands out as the Pioneer of Peace. He rightly recognised its foundation in the spirit and religion of universal non-violence (vihiṁsā bhūtanām) which alone could usher in the era of "Peace on Earth (Śānti) and Goodwill (Prīti) among men". He felt that War begins in the minds of men, in hate (as distinguished from prīti-rasa) and hostility of which their minds must be purified by the upsurge of a universal amity. Asoka established peace within his own dominion (viṣṭa) which was planned as a Dharma-chakra, a Kingdom of Righteousness, on the basis of ideals which humanity is still struggling to achieve.

It will thus be evident that the cult of physical non-violence had its inevitable moral effects and reactions in a wider sphere. It influenced domestic life, the home and family, which were purified by the cultivation of proper relations (sampratipatti), beginning with those between the youth and their parents and elders. Society felt more secure, as it was free of the fear of violence (apāya). Thus Peace (Śānti) settled on earth with abundance of goodwill (prīti) among men. Asoka took non-violence, physical and moral, as the root of human happiness and prosperity (hita-sukha).

VII

Ahaurā

A version of the Minor Rock Edict has been discovered on a hill at Ahaurā near Chunār (U. P.). It has not yet been published.

VIII

Amrāvati

At Amrāvati has been discovered a small fragment of an inscription engraved on what looks like a section of an Asokan pillar according to Dr. D. C. Sircar. Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XXXV on the ground of both palaeography and language. Its contents also "look more like those of the Asokan Edicts". In that case, as Dr. Sircar points out, the Buddhist Stupa at Amrāvati was originally built by Asoka.

IX

A revised Text of the Queen's Edict with its Translation (by Sri C. D. Chatterjee, M.A., of Lucknow University).

TEXT<sup>1</sup>

- (1) Devānampiyaṣā vachanenā savata mahamatā
- (2) vataviyā (//) E heta dutiyāye deviye dāne (/)
- (3) ambāvaḍikā vā ālame va dāna (ga)he va (/)
[ e vā pi a ] mne
- (4) kichi ganiyati tāye deviye (/) ṣe nāni
he vaṃga na ye (/)
- (5) dutiyāye deviye ti (/) Tivalamātu Kāluvākiye (//)<sup>2</sup>

TRANSLATION

By the injunction of His Gracious Majesty ('Beloved of the Gods'), the Mahāmātras ('Officers of the highest rank') in all stations (i.e., departments), are to be instructed thus :

"Whatever be the gift of the Second Queen that is (instituted) here, whether a mango-orchard, a monastic building, or an alms-house, and whatever else is being counted as (a gift) of that queen, all those (now) should be (officially) reckoned (in full) in the manner following :

'Gift of the Second Queen Chāruvāki ('Sweet of Speech') mother of Trivara ('Triple Blessing': Buddha, Dharma, and Saṅgha)'."

1. Reading as restored. cf. Annals, Bhan. Ori. Res. Ins. xxxlv. pp. 43-47.

2. The punctuation marks (within brackets) in the text have been interted for the convenience of the readers.

